LONDON, JULY 30, 1853.

AN act of so much importance, and involving so many changes in commercial jurisprudence, as the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106), has naturally given rise to many questions upon its construction*, and we propose to consider those which have arisen upon the class of provisions relating to arrangements by deed. (Sects. 224—229). The object which the Legislature had in view in enacting these clauses appears to have been to enable a debtor and his creditors to settle their own affairs between them; but as it was necessary to bind those creditors who would not sign the deed, it became also necessary to protect their interests. Subject to this protection, the contracting parties were properly intended to have a very wide discretion. It has, however, been decided in the Court of Exchequer Chamber, that the deed of arrangement, although signed by six-sevenths of the creditors, is invalid, unless it provides for the distribution of the whole of the trader's property. (Talley v. Taylor, 1 El. & Bl. 521; 17 Jur., part 1, p. 130; 21 L. J., Q. B., 346; overruling Talley v. Taylor, in the Queen's Bench, 16 Jur., part 1, p. 59; and supporting Drew v. Collins, 6 Exch. 670). Of course this decision of the Court of Error has since been followed by the Courts at Westminster. (Cooper v. Thornton, 22 L. J., Q. B., 145; Fisher v. Bell, 21 L. J., C. P., 228; Bibby v. Larpent, 20 Law T. 64).

It would seem to be but reasonable, and in accordance with the spirit of the provisions in question, that if six-sevenths of the creditors in number and value, whose debts amount to 10*l.* and upwards, think an arrangement conducive to the interests of the general body of creditors, although it may leave a trader a portion of his property, and yet not pay his creditors 20*s.* in the pound, such an agreement should be carried into effect by the Court. The decisions to the contrary seem to proceed upon the ground that it would be unjust to bind the remaining one-seventh, and the creditors under 10*l.*, by any agreement which did not distribute the whole of the estate; and also upon sect. 228, whereby the creditors are to have the "same rights respectively as to set-off, mutual credit, lien, and priority, and joint and separate assets shall be distributed in like manner as in bankruptcy." The Court of Queen's Bench were of opinion that these words simply meant, that in the case of partners making such an arrangement, the course adopted as to the joint and separate assets of bankrupt partners should be followed.

It would seem, however, that if the deed thus disposes of all the property, the mode of distribution may be left to the creditors by the deed, and need not precisely follow the mode adopted in bankruptcy. (See Phillips v. Surridge, 1 Lownd., M., & P. 458; and Drew v. Collins, 6 Exch. 670, 685, 688). In Phillips v. Surridge, Wilde, C. J., said, "Is it not the spirit of the act, that the creditors shall be protected by such trusts as they think best? The statute does not refer to a deed with any particular clauses, but uses words which may apply to many kinds of deeds, shewing the general nature of the arrangements between traders and their creditors which were contemplated, and was intended to give the largest discretion to creditors. It seems to me unnecessary to set out the clauses of the deed, as the statute is entirely silent with regard to any restrictions. It would be perfectly impossible to make a deed containing all the clauses and arrangements necessary for winding up an estate. If that were requisite, it would almost frustrate the intention of the act." And in Drew v. Collins, (6 Exch. 685), which is not overruled, but supported, by the decision in the Court of Error, Alderson, B., said, "It may be proper and reasonable under the statute to give the specified number and value of creditors an unlimited power as to the mode in which the estate is to be affected by the distribution, but the whole estate must go to the creditors." (And see per Martin, B., 6 Exch. 688).

* See, for instance, Messon v. Alcard, (16 Jur., part 1, p. 1090), as to notice, under sect. 221; Heslop v. Baker (6 Exch. 740; 15 Jur., part 1, p. 684; 8 Exch. 411) and Quartermaine v. Bittlestone, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 281), as to property in the order and disposition of the bankrupt vesting in the assignees only after an order for sale by the commissioners, under sect. 125; Taylor v. Wilson, (14 Jur., part 1, p. 336), as to contracts for forbearance of opposition, under sect. 202; and Oldfield v. Dodd, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 261; 22 L. J., Ex., 144), as to an act of bankruptcy by admitting part of the debt and denying the residue, where a bond is not given, nor the admitted part paid, under sects. 80—82.

A question has been raised whether three months must elapse, after notice of the deed having been signed by six-sevenths, before it can be made binding on those who have not signed, under sect. 225; or whether it is not sufficient if those who have not signed have had notice of the deed simply, and before it is signed by six-sevenths, and if the deed is signed by six-sevenths at any time during or at the end of the three months. We understand that Mr. Commissioner Evans has decided* that the deed must be signed by six-sevenths before the three months begin to run; but we submit that this is not the true construction of sects. 224, 225, and 229. (See also sect. 68).

The granting the certificate mentioned in sect. 225, which is to accelerate the binding effect of the deed before the lapse of the three months, is a judicial act, and may be opposed by creditors. (Ex parte Lawrence, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 144).

Although the 224th section states that every deed of arrangement, "now or hereafter entered into" &c., shall have the effect therein mentioned, yet it has been held that the section is not retrospective. (Marsh v. Higgins, 1 Lownd., M., & P. 253; 19 L. J., C. P., 297). That is, as explained in a later case, it does not apply to deeds completed before the act came into force; but it does apply to such instruments as were entered into before, and were inchoate at the time of, the passing of the act, and have been completed since that time. (Waugh v. Middleton and Another, 8 Exch. 352).

THE BOARD FOR THE CONSOLIDATION OF THE STATUTE LAW.

THE following extracts from papers relating to the Lord Chancellor's Commission for the Consolidation of the Statutes, which were laid on the table of the House of Lords on Wednesday, will be interesting to our readers:—

Copy of Note as to the Revision of the Statute Law.

I. The first process will be to ascertain precisely the text of the statute law as it now exists, by determining what statutes have been repealed, (expressly or virtually), what have expired, and what have become obsolete or unnecessary in the present state of society. For this purpose a copy of the folio edition of the statutes published by the Record Commission should be used, beginning with the Nova Statuta of Edward III, (see the Report of the Statute Law Commissioners), and for the later statutes, the quarto edition, making it complete (where statutes are not printed at length) by Queen's printer's copies and from other editions, postponing the question as to examining the copies with the original rolls till it is determined what enactments shall be actually founded on the results of the investigation.

The revised statutes will also be noticed, and whether revised intentionally or not, and those also as to which it is doubtful whether they are in force or not.

II. The text having been thus examined, a special and detailed report should be made of all the repealed, expired, and obsolete statutes; also of those which appear to have been revoked unintentionally, and those which are doubtful.

This report will form the groundwork of a declaratory bill to repeal (or confirm) such statutes, to be introduced, if possible, at the end of the present session.

III. All doubts being thus removed, and all unnecessary matter disposed of, the next process will be to devise a plan for a systematic arrangement of the existing statute law according to subjects, and to make a digest, (translating the Latin and French statutes).

This digest, when made, will be the materials for a consolidation of the existing statutes, and specimens of such consolidation will be prepared in various modes:—

- (a) Merely stating the existing statute law, removing discrepancies, obscurities, and surplusage, and incorporating the effect of judicial decisions.
- (b) Stating completely the law, statute and common, on the subject, with definitions, &c.

IV. The proceedings, after preparing such specimens, may be left for future consideration. If no such consolidations as above suggested are agreed upon, all that should be done as to the existing statutes (after the declaratory enactment before mentioned) will be to supply any deficiencies and remove doubts as to what is in force. What is necessary in this respect will be ascertained in the course of making the digest. In any case (even if no consolidation is attempted) the digest will be very useful as a guide to future legislation, as well in consolidating and altering the law, as in new enactments.

In the digest, the heads already consolidated, (revenue, &c.), and also criminal law, (unless Parliament decides not to go on with the digest already prepared), may be omitted.

V. Each party engaged in the different branches of the work will bear in mind, that, in addition to the object of rendering the existing statute law clear and consistent, there is another object equally important, namely, to establish, as far as possible, such systematic rules as may insure a like consistency and clearness in future legislation.

Copy of a Letter from H. Bellenden Ker, Esq., to the Lord Chancellor.

Lincoln's-inn, May 20, 1853.

My Lord,—In pursuance of your Lordship's directions, I beg to state that the gentlemen appointed by your Lordship to revise and consolidate the statute law, &c. met for the first time on the 2nd of April last, and that we had several subsequent meetings, at which we considered which would be the best mode of proceeding to carry out the objects indicated by your Lordship at the meeting held at your house on the 31st of March.

It was arranged that Mr. Anstey and Mr. Rogers should proceed with a careful examination of the statutes, commencing with the earliest, and should make a list of such as are obsolete or expired, or directly or virtually repealed, for the purpose of making a report to your Lordship, enumerating those which it might appear advisable at once to repeal or declare repealed, in order to remove so much useless matter from the Statute-book. In these lists great progress has been made, and Mr. Anstey and Mr. Rogers expect to have completed the revision of the whole Statute-book (for the preliminary purpose before mentioned) before the end of the present session.

Mr. Coode has been employed on a critical examination of the statutes on a different system, beginning with the latest statute, for the purpose of ascertaining exhaustively what is the law now in force. This will enable him, when his task is finished, to check and complete the lists of Mr. Anstey and Mr. Rogers.

Mr. Brickdale has been employed in preparing specimens of a digest according to several methods:—1st. A digest of the mere statute law. 2nd. A digest of the whole law as it now exists, including both statute and common law and the decisions of the Courts, but without introducing any alterations. 3rd. A digest or code introducing such improvements and simplifications as appear desirable, without departing from any general principles of English law. The subject which he has taken is that of distress for rent.

Mr. Anstey is also preparing, as a specimen, a digest of the law relating to insurance; and Mr. Coode is completing a very elaborate, and I conceive very useful, digest of the statutes now in force relating to the poor—a subject with which he has been familiar for some time. It is also proposed that Mr. Rogers shall prepare specimens of a digest of the law relating to bills of exchange.

The object of these specimens will be to give your Lordship the means of judging what will be the comparative value of digests prepared in the several modes above mentioned, and also what amount of alteration of the law will be necessary in order to make it more simple and accessible than it now is.

Mr. Brickdale has also employed a portion of his time in revising the list of repealed and other statutes prepared by Mr. Rogers; and Mr. Anstey's list will be revised in like manner before being submitted to your Lordship.

During the progress of our examination of the statutes the attention of all has been turned to the consideration of what improvements may be introduced in the mode of framing and passing future statutes, and especially to the consideration of the different Clauses Consolidation Acts, which have been found so useful in diminishing the length and insuring the completeness and uniformity of local and personal acts, with a view to the question whether they may not be rendered more complete, and whether the principle on which they are based may not be extended.

I fully expect that before the end of this session we shall be able to lay before your Lordship for consideration the several matters to which I have above referred.

I have the honour to remain, my Lord,

Your Lordship's faithful servant,

H. BELLENDEN KER.

The Lord Chancellor, &c.

The Right Hon. Sir John Jervis, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women:—Samuel Hadfield, of Manchester, in and for the county of Lancaster; William Evans, of Coventry, in and for the county of Warwick.

Reviews.

A Letter to the Right Hon. Lord John Russell on the Transfer of Landed Property. By ROBERT WILSON. 8vo. Pp. 74. [Blentarn.]

WE make no apology for recurring so soon to this subject, for though the progress of the Government bill has been arrested, the question is likely for some time to excite more interest and discussion than ever.

The changes made from time to time in their bills by the promoters of Mr. Duval's plan of registration have been unfairly adduced by Lord St. Leonards as proof of imperfection in the development of the plan. In a matter so conventional as registration, considerable variation may be admitted in the details, without sacrificing either principle or convenience; and even an imperfect bill, with a chance of passing, may have sufficient good in it to be preferable to a better which is sure to be rejected. When the question is of shelter, we build a cottage rather than attempt a mansion. We trust, therefore, that Mr. Wilson's present modifications of the scheme, which in 1847 he developed so ably before the Registration Commissioners, will not be treated as an acknowledgment of error. They are obviously concessions made for the purpose of disarming opposition. Mr. Wilson abates something of the continuity of his chain of certificates for the purpose of allowing free play to the equitable doctrine of notices, and of delivering the care of particular interests into the hands of the owners themselves of those interests. We doubt the expediency of this course. Prejudices on the part of landowners in favour of this or that rule of law or practice will be insignificant obstacles to the adoption of any plan of registration. The main source of the opposition is fear of increased expense on the part of landowners and land societies, and fear of loss of professional emoluments on the part of lawyers. The first fear must be overcome by removing all ground for it; and against the effects of the second we can only trust to the goodness of our cause and the support of the laity. Nothing is to be hoped from a compromise. The more Mr. Wilson recommends his plan to unprofessional intelligence, by perfecting its simplicity and efficiency, the more likely he is to triumph over the opposition of his own class.

Mr. Wilson's original proposition was to insist on the absolute power of disposition being at all times vested in some person or persons in existence, or, in the case of death, immediately ascertainable by a court of probate and administration real, subject only to the impediment of the personal incapacity of any registered owner, and to the right of a settlor to vest the protection of his settlement in the Court of Chancery. This was to be done by making (after the difficulties of existing titles had been overcome) the registrar's certificate the sole and conclusive evidence of title to the property described and the estate or interest mentioned in it, and by making the cancellation of the existing certificate, on a change of ownership, an essential preliminary to the granting of a certificate to the new owner. The difficulty of proving a title by descent or devise was to be met by vesting the real estates of a dead man in his administrators or executors real, to be appointed or recognised by a proper Court. Under that plan, the guardianship of executory and contingent estates would be confided to trustees, or to the Court of Chancery, just as is now done in all cases where personal property is settled, and in all cases where settled real property is subjected to powers of sale—that is to say, in almost every case in which executory or contingent interests in real estate are created. Our opinion of this plan, formed after much consideration, is, that it is in the highest degree simple, safe, and effective, and that the adoption of it, though involving some interference with the formal principles of our law of real property, will not introduce any change at all in its practical working, beyond the removal of a prodigious burthen of complexity, uncertainty, delay, and expense.

The modification of this plan now proposed by Mr. Wilson is to register a title to the freehold in some person or persons in esse, evidenced by certificate, and transferable by indorsement on the certificate, leading to its cancellation and the issuing of a new certificate to the new owner. The registered freehold title is to be taken, in favour of purchasers and others without notice, to be an absolute unincumbered title in fee simple. Notice of an adverse or qualifying title may be obtained by any of the means now recognised in courts of equity; and provision is made for giving notice infallibly by the entry of a claim on the registry. Any person may register a claim against any registered title, at the risk, if the claim be unfounded, of having to pay the expense of a proceeding by summons before the registrar for the removal of the claim. The claim, if founded on any documentary title, e. g. a settlement, is to be accompanied with a copy of the document which is registered. A certificate of the registration of the claim is granted to the applicant. It does not constitute the claimant's title to the interest which he claims, but it carries with it the right to require or consent to the removal of the registered document from the register. The certificate, with that right attached to it, may be transferred by indorsement, cancellation, and renewal, in the same manner as the certificate of title to the freehold. So long as the claim remains on the register, no one can acquire a title, either from the registered claimant or from the registered freeholder, without notice of the registered document, including therefore notice of all the estates created by that document. Thus, the registration of a settlement by a tenant for life, an annuitant, or a younger child, protects all the interests under the settlement, (including those of unborn children), so long as the claim remains on the register. But on the expiration or surrender of the interest in right of which the claim was registered, the registered freeholder may require the claim, and the copy of the document which accompanied it, to be removed from the register. This will be done, after a judicial inquiry by the registrar, if the party in whose name the claim stands for the time being is dead, and his executor or administrator does not consent.

If provision had been made by a will or a settlement, for the registration of a claim in the names of trustees, the registrar would, on an application by the freeholder to have the claim cancelled on the ground of the death of the surviving trustee, require new trustees to be appointed, or would register the settlement in the name of the Court of Chancery, unless (if it should be thought fit to give him such jurisdiction) he were satisfied that there no longer remained any interest under the settlement to be protected; and a will or settlement might expressly exclude any specified claimant or claimants under it from the right to registration of their claim.

On the death of the freeholder, his executor or administrator would represent him for the purposes of the registry; but Mr. Wilson does not seem to have fully developed this part of his present plan.

There is much ingenuity in this plan. It would enable every person to secure for himself, and for those claiming under him, the most complete protection that could be desired—a protection much more complete than is always to be had at present; and at the same time it would leave the title clear of every claim which, from its remoteness or insignificance, from confidence in the freeholder, or from any other cause, might be thought not to require registration. It would prevent any one from turning, as Mr. Wilson expresses it, "the whole troop of contingent remainders and shifting uses loose into the title, like so many wild beasts, without a keeper." It would furnish the most simple and convenient form for conveyance that can be desired. It would to a great extent put an end to the retrospective investigation of title; and, if we had not already obtained from Mr. Wilson himself the idea of a more perfect contrivance, we should without hesitation recommend the adoption of this.

Our objections to the proposed machinery, or rather our reasons for preferring the old plan to the new one, are, first, that the latter would not work with sufficient ease and certainty; and, secondly, that it would not wholly put an end to the retrospective deduction of title.

To come at once to particulars. Let us suppose that a small estate is devised in settlement, and charged with annuities and legacies, and, as we cannot calculate on a will being always judiciously drawn, even by a professional pen, that no provision is made for registration in the names of trustees, or for preventing registration by any other persons. The will cannot be registered by the executors, unless they are also to have the power of removing it from the register, and that would be to revert to Mr. Wilson's original plan, so far as wills are concerned. If that is not done, and there are no trustees, every claimant under the will must, for his protection, register a claim at once; and it might easily happen that the interests of infants and persons unborn, as well as of persons abroad or having no knowledge of the will, would be wholly unprotected. For though registration of the will by any one claimant would, while it continued, protect all the rest, it is of the essence of the plan that the registered claimant might at any moment remove the will from the register, and immediately afterwards, if the will were not already registered in some other name, the freeholder might defeat it by a sale to a stranger. And in the regular course of proceeding, and without any fraudulent intention, a registered claim might, on the expiration of the particular interest represented by it, be removed from the register, and with it all notice of the will itself, at a time when, from absence, incapacity, want of vigilance, or one of a thousand other conceivable causes, no claimant under the will would be ready to make a new entry. Thus we should be exposed in many cases to a multiplicity of entries, necessarily involving some amount of trouble and expense, and, if founded on mistaken construction, litigation and delay, and in others to insecurity of a kind and degree not easy to be accurately estimated by us, who live under the rule "caveat emptor."

Moreover, the necessity for the removal of claims after the expiration of the interests represented by them would frequently occasion as much inconvenience as exists under the present system. Let the interest of a registered claimant be supposed to be a rent-charge for his own life. Proof of his death, sufficient to satisfy a public officer, must be formally made at the office; presumptive evidence would be rejected; and unless the protection of the executor's title to the arrears, if any, be abandoned, the concurrence of the personal representatives must in every case be obtained, or they must be sought out, their title proved to the satisfaction of the registrar, and notice given to them. In no case could a registered document be got rid of without either the concurrence of the claimant, or proof, according to the strict rules of a public office, necessarily framed with a view to the utmost security, of some death or other fact, often impossible to be proved at all. The refusal of a claimant, whose title either was originally invalid or has ceased, to surrender his claim, is to be met by barring him, after a short notice to prove his title. Even the avoidance of such delay or of such litigation may occasionally be worth a price; and either the protection of claimants beyond seas must be abandoned, or occasion for still greater delay must be given.

Living titles would frequently be incumbered with the remains of those which had expired. So long as any trifling claim under a settlement or will remains on the register, a purchaser must take up the deduction of title from the time of the execution of the settlement or the death of the testator at the least; and if the settlement refers to any prior title, as a will or a former settlement, (and there is no security against the unskilful, or indeed sometimes almost necessary, introduction of such recitals), the notice conveyed by the register might involve the production and verification of a respectable abstract.

If, then, the new plan would introduce some elements of trouble, expense, and delay, and even, to the unvigilant, of insecurity, which are excluded from the original plan, we are entitled to inquire what is the value of the power of self-protection and of the operation of notice which it is intended to secure? A sufficient answer to this inquiry is to be found in the practice of landowners and conveyancers at the present day, who, by the almost invariable use of powers of sale and indemnity clauses, declare their conviction that all the complicated interests created by settlements, as well of the largest as of the smallest estates, may be safely exposed to risks identical in kind with, but considerably greater in degree than, those to which they would be exposed under Mr. Wilson's original plan.

Mr. Wilson appears to think that the new plan could be more easily brought into operation than the old one, the register of a title as actual freeholder not involving an assertion of absolute title, which might be untrue. But both plans are placed on the same footing in that respect, if we say that the title of a certificate holder under the original plan shall be subject to all the infirmities of the title of the person who first placed the estate on the register.

LONDON, AUGUST 6, 1853.

THE close of an eventful legal year has now arrived, and the reflections and anticipations to which its course gives rise are anything but cheerful or encouraging to the Profession—meaning, by the Profession, that existing body of men which maintains itself actually by the practice of the law as a calling. As to them, we cannot doubt that to both branches of the Profession, and in both the leading branches of the law—equity and common law—profitable employment has diminished, is diminishing, and will diminish. We are not saying whether it is right or wrong that this should be the case, nor whether such a consummation could or could not have been avoided; we are merely stating a fact, which we believe every day-book in London and Westminster, and every fee-book in the Temple and Lincoln's-inn, will bear out. At common law, the Procedure Improvement Act, while it has nearly swept away one whole body of practitioners, the special pleaders, and immensely curtailed the emoluments both of counsel and attornies, has not yet succeeded in wrenching from the county courts the mass of business that they had, in the unreformed days of the common-law courts, drawn to themselves. The people, who, if they are not "the only true source of power," are certainly the principal source of profit to the lawyer, still cling to the county courts in spite of their defects, and if only a few alterations were made in those courts, would flock to them still more, to the disinherison and great damage of the Bar and the higher class of attornies.

In Chancery the pressure has been hitherto felt pretty equally by both the Bar and the solicitors; but hereafter we believe it will be principally felt by the Bar, because, though there can be no question that the quantity of business—that is, the number of suits and transactions—will much increase under the improved system, yet the new system being based upon the principle of transacting as much of the business of a suit as possible in the judges' chambers, and confining the employment of counsel to the arguing of really contested points in court, it is obvious that the effect will be, the transfer of a large quantity of business to the hands of the solicitors.

Again: we are not questioning whether this ought or ought not to be so, but merely stating a fact, which none can doubt who look attentively at the spirit of the new Chancery Acts and Orders, and the way in which the judges do and must carry them out.

To the existing Chancery Bar, then, the prospect is not encouraging; and if we bear in mind the commission just issued by the Lord Chancellor to several of the county court judges and some other gentlemen, to inquire into the state of the county courts, particularly with reference to the propriety of giving to them some equity jurisdiction, it is tolerably certain, that before another session shall have passed, the decree will go forth which will sweep away a very considerable portion of the business of the existing body of Chancery solicitors; for it cannot be well doubted that the commission will recommend that some equity jurisdiction should be given to the county courts—a jurisdiction at least administrative, in respect of estates of moderate amount, and probably also a contentious jurisdiction when the sums involved are small. If these things are done—and done they will be—farewell to a great portion of the business which now flows into the offices of Chancery solicitors.

In truth, the whole system of the administration of justice, and as a consequence the position of the professors of the law, is in a state of dislocation and transition. We ourselves believe that the tendency of the public mind is, and the consequent probable course of legislation will be, to transfer the initiation of nearly all suits and actions to the local courts, and to convert what are termed the superior courts into merely courts of appeal. Considering the enormous increase of business and wealth of many of the provincial communities during the last quarter of a century, and the increased facility and rapidity of communication—considering also the general extension of commercial transactions, and the great increase of personal property and business arising out of it, creating the subject-matter of a great mass of small litigation, which must be disposed of quickly, and under the immediate eye of the parties interested, to be usefully disposed of, it seems not unreasonable that such a change as we contemplate should take place. At any rate, it seems very likely that it will take place, and the London solicitors, as well as the Bar, will do well to consider and calculate on its probability. In respect to the changes that have hitherto taken place in the Court of Chancery, at least, no one can doubt that they have hitherto worked for the benefit of the public, but they have been accompanied by some unnecessary and improper injury to the Profession. We do not refer to those changes which have either swept away superfluous proceedings, or have transferred certain portions of the proceedings from one branch of the Profession to another; of those changes no one can, or at least ought, to complain. What we refer to is the retention of a mode and scale of professional remuneration created for the old system of procedure, and not adapted to the present system. It is quite right that the superfluity of writing and paper, and proceedings of all kinds, which increased the expense of the suitor, should be abolished.

But since, in the old time, it was the payment for those superfluous things which remunerated the legal practitioner for the mental labour employed upon the kernel of all this husk, and there was no payment for the mental labour per se, it is not either reasonable or just, that when the system is altered to one in which the mental labour remains, while the superfluous writing, &c. is done away, the Profession should continue to be remunerated in reference to a length which no longer exists, and without reference to the mental labour and time which do continue.

In plain English, under the new system of procedure, both the Bar and the solicitor must have a new tariff of fees, based not upon length, but on the principle of quantum meruit.

This is being gradually and forcibly felt, though, from a mistaken notion of delicacy, it is not yet sufficiently, and with sufficient publicity, brought before the notice of those who have the arrangement of law reforms. We venture, therefore, to avail ourselves of our incognito, to be vulgar enough to state openly, that the subject, both of solicitors' charges and counsel's fees, requires an entire revision, to be in harmony with the new system of things; and that the principle of payment ought to have reference to time and difficulty, and not to length, except in so far as necessary length may involve consumption of time.

THE RIGHT TO INSERT A POWER OF APPOINTMENT IN A SURRENDER OF COPYHOLDS.

In the recent case of Flack v. Downing College, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 697), the Court of Common Pleas held that a lord of a manor was not bound to accept a surrender of copyholds containing a general power of appointment, there being no special custom entitling the tenant to make such a surrender. The lord in that case had refused to accept and inrol a conditional surrender, by way of mortgage, of a copyhold tenement, "to such uses and in such manner as E. F., his executors, administrators, or assigns, at any time, or from time to time, during the lives of the surrenderor and E. F., or the life of the survivor of them, or within twenty-one years from the day of the decease inclusively of such survivor, should by any writing or writings under his or their hand or hands appoint, and in default of and until appointment, to the use of the said E. F., his heirs and assigns for ever, according to the custom of the manor;" and the question was submitted for the opinion of the Court in the form of a special case. Jervis, C. J., said—"There is no doubt that in the case of wills there is such right of nomination; but that, I think, is a right peculiar to wills, and is founded on the special custom of each manor, and is one which does not apply to transactions inter vivos. . . . The question now is, whether the tenant on the rolls has the right of forcing on the lord a surrender which shall create this power of nomination. It is true, that under one construction it may not have the effect of depriving the lord of having always a tenant, but it will have the effect of depriving him of his fine. I apprehend that this is an objection which the lord has a right to make." Maule, J., said—"I think that this case comes within the spirit in which the case of Matthew v. Osborne (17 Jur., part 1, p. 696) was determined. That case was determined, I think, on the ground that the lord could not be called on to recognise persons by means of transactions to which he, the lord, was a stranger. It is satisfactory to know that our judgment need not be conclusive, as a mandamus may, notwithstanding, be obtained."

It is certainly satisfactory to know that the decision is not conclusive, as its effect would be to stop the use of a very common and very convenient form of assurance. The decision has been a surprise upon the Profession, and there can be no doubt, we conceive, that it is unsound; but it is difficult to meet with argument a decision for which no reason is given, and the effect of which is to make an anomalous exception to a general rule. We can only ask, why is this? We are all familiar with the general principle, that "the lord is only as an instrument to convey the estate, and as it were put in trust to make such an admittance as he who surrenders would have him to make;" (Brook's case, Poph. 125; Cro. Jac. 434); and consequently every limitation of use which is not void for remoteness, or on any other ground of public policy, may be inserted in a surrender, and must be allowed of by the lord; and when we are told that the lord may object to a limitation of familiar and daily use in assurances both of freehold and of copyhold land, we are capable of amazement only until we hear the reason; and when, instead of giving a reason, the Court declines to decide in favour of the tenant until he produces a custom, or some authority in his favour, we can only remark, that the Court is bold to lay down an unreasonable and inexplicable exception to a general rule, without either custom or authority to support it.

We say that no reason was given for the decision, because the suggestion, that the results of a mortgage with a power of appointment might not be so profitable to the lord as those of a mortgage without such a power, cannot be regarded seriously. We recognise the rule that the Legislature is presumed not to intend to abridge or interfere with any right of a lord of a manor where it does not expressly mention copyholds; but it is new to us, when the question is as to the existence of an alleged right, to have it decided exclusively by reference to the lord's pocket. The admitted principle with respect to copyholds is, that the lord is a minister, bound to register all lawful limitations of the copyhold which the tenant thinks fit to make—lawful limitations being those which, being made, the law allows to take effect. That the tenant is not confined to the transfer of a fee simple, but has a general power to modify the limitations, according to convenience or contract, as by way of settlement, &c., is admitted, and the legality of a power of appointment in the surrender of copyholds is settled. It is for the lord, therefore, when he excepts to a particular limitation, to make out his case against it.

In discussing the validity of limitations in surrenders of copyholds, the old writers considered whether they were agreeable to the rules of law, but never inquired whether they were agreeable to the lords of the manor. Thus, Coke in the Complete Copyholder (s. 35, p. 81) says, "And in customary grants upon surrenders the law is not so strict as in grants at the common law. For in grants at the common law, if the grantee be not in rerum natura, and able to take by virtue of the grant presently upon the grant made, it is merely void. . . . If I surrender to the use of him that shall come next into Pauls after such an hour, whose fortune soever it is to come first, the lord must admit him, and I shall never avoid it. The same law is, if I surrender to the use of him that J. S. shall nominate or that I myself shall nominate to the lord at the next meeting. The reason of the law is this—a surrender is a thing executory, which is executed by the subsequent admittance, and nothing at all is invested in the grantee before the lord hath admitted him, according to the surrender."

When Mr. Sanders (prior to the decisions in Bodington v. Abernethy and Rex v. Oundle) wrote his argument in favour of the validity of springing uses limited on the surrender of copyhold property, (and mainly with reference to those very powers of appointment), it never occurred to him to consider such uses with reference to the amount of fines they might bring in to or intercept from the lord. If the lord of a manor may refuse a surrender with a power of appointment, because it may not be so productive of admittances as a plain surrender in fee, we do not see how he can be bound to accept a surrender to the use of A. for life, with remainder to B. in fee, on which (if there is no custom to the contrary) the admittance of A. is the admittance of B., and only one fine is due, and which would clearly be less beneficial to the lord than a simple surrender to the use of A. in fee. (Tipping v. Bunning, Moore, 465; Blackburne v. Graves, 1 Vent. 260; Ely v. Caldecott, 1 Moo. & Sc. 633; Phypers v. Burn, 3 Scott, 634).

The lord is entitled to have the tenancy always full, and he is not bound to recognise any person as a tenant who does not claim either by descent or in accordance with the terms of a surrender actually made, (or, in the case of a will not made, but paid for), and so claiming, comes in to be admitted. If the copyholder can, by means of a surrender alone, answer his purposes, or if, by any legal limitation of use, he can contrive to avoid an admittance, which, under a different course of proceeding, would be necessary, there is no principle of law or rule of tenure that prevents him. The decision in Flack v. Downing College is not a deduction from the rule that the lord is entitled to have the tenancy full, or from the rule that copyhold estates can only be transferred by surrender and admittance or under the Statute of Wills: it depends for its validity on the establishment of a third rule, which was never before heard of, namely, that of two forms of limitation, each equally consistent with the rules above mentioned, the lord may oblige the tenant to adopt that which is least convenient to himself, if it be most profitable to the lord. For the surrender which was rejected in that case was not a mere device to evade an admittance: it was substantially the most convenient and appropriate form in which a security could be taken. The object was to secure the repayment of a loan, with interest, to the lender, his executors, administrators, or assigns, by means of a power to sell a copyhold estate. The estate was never intended to be vested in the mortgagor: he and his representatives were the only persons who could not purchase it. To vest it in him, who could never make it available except by getting rid of it, would have secured the object indeed, but in the most clumsy and circuitous way. If vested in him, it would go on his death away from his executor, to whom the money would be due, to his heir, who would have no interest in the security, and who might be an infant, or otherwise incapacitated. The substance of the bargain was, that if the money were not paid at the appointed time, the mortgagor, his executors or administrators, should be entitled to find a purchaser for the estate. Until sale, the estate was to belong to the mortgagor, subject to the power of sale; when sold, it was to be transferred to the purchaser. The simple and complete expression of the bargain was contained in the power of sale and power of appointment, both transmissible with the debt to the personal representatives; yet the Court of Common Pleas holds that the tenant shall not deal in this plain and sensible way with his own property, of which the lord is only an instrument put in trust to convey the estate as the tenant would have it done—with the right to a fine whenever the legal estate passes—but shall be bound to adopt a clumsy and circuitous form, contrary to the intention, merely for the purpose of obliging a person to take admittance who was never intended to be tenant, and who, if obliged to assume the character, would do so only for the purpose of immediately relinquishing it in favour of the person who from the beginning was intended to fill it.

Such is the absurdity involved in the decision as applicable to a mortgage. But we go further, and assert that the tenant is entitled on any occasion to adopt any form of limitation known to the law, even though his sole object be to evade the payment of fines. To the tenant is given the absolute dominion over the uses; to the lord is given the right to a fine whenever the tenancy is changed or becomes vacant, but nothing more. It was said by the Court, in Flack v. Downing College, that the cases of wills were peculiar, and depended on the special custom of each manor. But that is not so with reference either to the power of devising generally, or to the particular limitation in question. The power of surrendering to the use of a will is incident to every copyhold of inheritance, and neither requires proof of a special custom, nor can be disproved by any negative evidence. (Pike v. White, 3 Bro. C. C. 286). The dictum of Lord Abinger to the contrary, in Doe v. Llewellyn, (2 C., M., & R. 503), is clearly unsound, and indeed inconsistent with his own decision in the case. And if the creation of a power of appointment be an infringement of the lord's rights, it must be as much so in a will as in a surrender; so that the decision of the Court of Common Pleas requires that all powers of appointment in wills should be held invalid, at the option of the lord.

There is no prior authority on the present point, but there is abundance in favour of the validity of the limitation. In Holder d. Sulyard v. Preston (2 Wils. 400) it was held that a copyholder, who had surrendered a copyhold to the use of his will, could by his will empower trustees to sell the copyhold and nominate the person to be admitted under such surrender, without themselves taking admission, and that the lord could only claim a single fine. (See Beal v. Shepherd, Cro. Jac. 199).

In Rez v. Hendon (2 T. R. 484) the tenant had covenanted to surrender his tenement to the use of G., and the covenant was presented at a customary court, and the purchase money paid. G. sold his interest to R., and the original vendor surrendered directly to the use of R. The lord contended that he was entitled to be paid a fine on the intermediate sale, before he could be called upon to admit R. The decision was, that he was bound to admit before he could claim any fine, but the Court expressed an opinion that he could not claim two fines. "All the lord had a right to require was to have a tenant, and there he had one during the whole time."

In Rez v. Boughey, (1 B. & Cr. 565), where the custom of a manor entitled a copyholder to admittance to a new tenant on payment of a smaller fine than would be paid by a stranger, the lord was compelled to admit a person to a small tenement which he had purchased for the purpose of reducing the fine on his admittance to a more valuable tenement previously purchased. The Court said that the purchaser was entitled so to avail himself of the custom.

In Boddington v. Abernethy (5 B. & Cr. 776) a copyhold was surrendered to the uses of an existing settlement of freeholds, which contained a power of revocation and new appointment, and a title derived under an exercise of the power was held to be good.

The validity of a surrender to such uses as A. should appoint, and in default of appointment, to the use of A. and his heirs, and the right of A.'s appointee to admittance without any previous admittance of A., were established in Rez v. Oundle, (1 Ad. & El. 283); and this was followed in Glass v. Richardson, (9 Hare, 698; 23 L. J., Ch., 105).

In Eddleston v. Collins, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 331), where a surrender, with a power of appointment, had been accepted by an infant steward, and the question was as to the capacity of the steward, Lord Cranworth, C., said—"I give no opinion whether the lord was bound to accept such a surrender: probably he might not be." And that suggestion of a doubt is the sole authority in favour of the decision in Flack v. Downing College.

In Reg. v. The Dean and Chapter of Ely (17 Jur. part 1, p. 699, note) a rule absolute for a mandamus to the lord to accept a surrender containing a power of appointment was granted, after argument.

The particulars of the case of Matthew v. Osborne, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 696), which Maule, J., thought might bear on the principal case, had evidently escaped his Lordship's recollection. In Matthew v. Osborne an attempt was made to establish the principle, that before the stat. 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26, a surrenderee could devise or assign his right to admittance. The contrary was of course decided, on the ground that the customary mode of alienation was alone admissible. That decision has no bearing on the question whether the lord can object to his tenant's laying the foundation for a mode of alienation which follows the custom and is admitted to be valid. G. S.

We fear that an attempt to force the titles placed under the shelter of a registry, by any very stringent rule of limitation, would not be endured. The present rules of limitation might possibly be made more stringent against unregistered titles, and a short bar might be provided in a few special cases; but the suggestion of a single case will be sufficient to shew the difficulty of the attempt. Suppose a tenant for life under the will of his deceased wife's father to have been in possession for fifty years, having, perhaps, made a vagabond of the heir, is he to be allowed, under cover of the register, to make a good title—sell, and decamp with the money? It is said that such frauds may be committed under the present system. They are possible, but the caution of buyers (which would cease with their risk) renders the commission of them extremely difficult.

We shall allow Mr. Wilson to speak for himself in a few extracts, which will serve in some measure to explain the machinery of both plans; for the ingenious contrivance of the certificate and claim is the basis of each. Our readers should refer to the pamphlet for illustrations of the form and use of the certificate:—

"Every piece of land has at all times, by the very necessity of its appropriation, and moreover by an inflexible rule of law, its holder; or, if I may use the proper technical term, though suggestive of an extinct social distinction, its 'freeholder.' The name of the freeholder de facto might be ascertained without investigation of title, and might be registered as the 'root of title.'"

"There would not be anything arbitrary in this arrangement. The register, confining itself to the proper duty of a register, namely, that of recording facts which exist independently of it, would commence with a simple entry of a state of things visibly existing at the date of its commencement. It would put down the name of the person actually holding the land, as a matter of fact, without either declaring the validity or defining the extent of his interest; at the same time calling upon all other persons, who had anything to state respecting the title, to put down their names and make their statements.

"In deference to common opinion, I ought, perhaps, to propose to allow some such period as five years for the registration of the rest of the title; though, for my own part, I cannot see why a person, who is at home and sui juris, should not be compelled to bring in his title within two years, or even within one year.

"An extension of time must be allowed in favour of persons abroad, or under disabilities; and, at any rate, I would not give such persons more than two years beyond the period of absence or disability. At the end of some fixed period, say fifteen or twenty years, or longer if thought necessary, the register must be in full operation against all the world.

"The registered freehold, as it would merely express or represent the simple indivisible fact of present possession, would be transferable, like a railway share, on a printed form. On the registration of a transfer, the freehold would be taken out of the name of the transferor, and put into the name of the transferee.

"Presumptively, the freehold would be transmissible to the freeholder's legal representative. This representative might be the heir or the devisee, according to the present law; but it would be more convenient to refer all administrative duties, for the real as well as for the personal property, to the executor; as has often been proposed. I shall assume, though without insisting on this point, that the freehold would pass to the executor. On production of the probate, the freehold would be put into the name of the executor, if no one else appeared to claim it. If a competing claim were brought forward, the registrar would give his decision upon it, and would put the freehold into the name of the claimant or of the executor, as the case might be. The registrar's decision would be subject to revision, as I will explain presently; but the freehold would be registered, at all events, with the appeal, if there were one, as a registered qualification of it.

"Landed property would thus be kept registered in the name of the freeholder for the time being. The registered freeholder might hold subject to equities; he might be a trustee, or be implicated in a fraud, in which case the person beneficially entitled or defrauded might take proceedings against him for the purpose of recovering the freehold from him. A claim against the freeholder would be virtually a claim against the land, while the freehold remained registered in the name of the person responsible. And, in order to preserve a lien on the land, in the event of the freehold changing hands, the claimant would put a notice of his claim upon the register, so as to make the claim a part of the registered title. For in favour of a purchaser (by which term I mean a person acquiring a title by any kind of contract) for valuable consideration, without notice, the registered title would be the whole title. On the sale of an estate simply registered in the name of the freeholder, without notice on the register of any right or claim besides the freehold, a transfer, conveying an absolutely secure title in fee simple, to a purchaser for valuable consideration, who had not received notice extrinsically of an interfering, though unregistered, right, might be filled up and signed in the auction-room. The seller and purchaser might walk over together to the register office, where, on hearing that nothing was entered against the freehold, the purchaser might hand his bank notes to the seller in exchange for the signed transfer." (P. 4).

"There must be a 'Land Register Office' in London, consisting at first of a large room for the county of Kent, divided, as in the annexed plan, into eight compartments for parish business, alphabetically distinguished, like the compartments in the transfer offices at the Bank of England; with a ninth compartment for general county business.

"After a suitable notice, an assistant registrar would go down from the London office to the parish of Graveley, for the purpose of registering the names of the freeholders of the lands contained in that parish. He would hold meetings and receive claims, and would, in the occasional, but I should hope not very frequent, case of conflicting claims to the freehold, ascertain by evidence who was the freeholder de facto, and enter his name, subject to appeal. He would, in substance, follow the practice laid down by the General Inclosure Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, 48th and following sections, the marginal notes of which would, if the words 'assistant registrar' and 'registrar' were substituted for the words 'valuer' and 'commissioner,' run thus: 'Assistant registrar to hold meetings;' 'Claims to be delivered in writing;' 'Statement of claims to be deposited for examination;' 'Claims to be heard and determined by assistant registrar, subject to appeal to registrar;' 'Titles not to be determined by assistant registrar or registrar.'

"This last is the marginal note of the 49th section, which expressly adopts our proposed principle of registering the possession, by providing that nothing in the act contained 'shall extend to enable the valuer or the commissioners, or any assistant commissioner . . . to determine any right between any parties, contrary to the actual possession of any such party.'" (P. 25).

"We may suppose that Mr. Dickson, sen., the settlor, does not register the settlement, his interest under it being the freehold, which already stands in his name. Mr. Dickson, jun., sends a copy of the settlement to the office, accompanied by a claim to the registration of it; and accordingly it is put upon the register under his name. At the same time, or afterwards, Mrs. Dickson, sen., and Mrs. Dickson, jun., severally register the settlement, by reference to the copy already filed.

"Under these registrations, Mrs. Dickson, sen., and Mr. and Mrs. Dickson, jun., would each be in possession of a certificate, which must be surrendered or set aside before the settlement could be taken out of the title. Consequently the freeholder cannot convey a title to the prejudice of any of the persons, living or unborn, interested under the settlement, without the affirmative concurrence, in writing, of his wife, his son, and his son's wife.

"The trustees for raising portions also enter a claim, referring to the registered copy of the settlement. I have supposed that there are two trustees, but there might be half-a-dozen or more, and each trustee might hold his own separate certificate, which might be distinguished from the certificates of the other trustees by some private mark or symbol; for instance, 'dog,' 'ship,' 'tree.'

"Suppose, further, that the protection of the entails, as well as the raising of the portions, is made a part of the office of the trustees. We shall then have secured the continuance of the settlement in the title in favour of all persons, living or unborn, interested under it, until each of two or of any greater number of persons, chosen as persons specially deserving of confidence, individually signs his name to a document authorising the commission of a direct fraud, for all the consequences of which his signature would render him personally responsible to every person injured by it.

"If it be said that all the trustees might die, I answer, that even then the affirmative concurrence, in writing, of the legal representative of the last surviving trustee, who by concurring would render himself personally responsible to make good all injuries caused by his concurrence, must be obtained before the registration of the settlement can be removed. Or, if there were no representative of the last surviving trustee, there must be an application to the registrar to strike out the registration of the settlement, standing in the names of the trustees, on the ground that there is now no living representative of that registration; and on the hearing of such an application, the registrar, as he must, on inquiring into the facts, detect an intended fraud, would, instead of striking out the registration, register the Court of Chancery as trustee, on the principle that a trust ought never to fail for want of a person to execute it.

"Some person is not satisfied with all this. It is not enough that the active concurrence of the wife, the son, and the son's wife—of any number of trustees, men of character, assuming a personal responsibility for all consequences of their concurrence—of the representative of the last surviving trustee, if all the trustees have died before the first tenant in tail is old enough to take care of himself—and of the Court of Chancery if there be no such representative—should be the condition of the premature withdrawal of the settlement from the registered title. If a further 'safeguard be required, it can be provided. It may be a provision of the settlement that the certificates of the trustees shall be filed in the Court of Chancery immediately after the execution of the settlement, and shall remain there until all the trusts have been performed. The effect of this provision would be, that the settlement could never be taken out of the title until its removal were expressly ordered by the Court of Chancery.' (P. 64).

'Let us now suppose that a sale is made, under a power of sale contained in the settlement, requiring for its exercise the concurrence or consent of Mr. and Mrs. Dickson, sen., Mr. and Mrs. Dickson, jun., or the survivors of them, and the trustees for the time being. The abstract of title, so to call it, would then consist of a copy of the settlement, which, by shewing the power, would prove the legality of the sale, if made with the required consents. The estate would be conveyed upon the usual printed form, signed by the freeholder; the other parties would surrender their claims, and thus withdraw the settlement from the registered title; and the required consents would be given by a short unregistered document, which the purchaser would retain for his protection against any claim which might be made against him by any person interested under the settlement.' (P. 69).

On the Reform of the Law of Real Property, in a Letter to the Right Hon. Lord Lyndhurst, &c. By H. BELLENDEN KER, Esq. 8vo., pp. 124.

[Stevens & Norton.]

WE shall not on this occasion attempt either to criticise or to give a summary of the contents of this publication. The interest of the subject-matter, and the eminence of the learned author, are sufficient to secure for it attention, even beyond the limits of the Profession; and the lively and agreeable style in which it is written will prevent its being laid aside half read. The measure principally recommended by Mr. Ker, and from which he anticipates the most important results, is a general digest of the law of real property, involving, of course, either as an accompaniment or as a consequence, the amendment of such parts of the law as are objectionable or defective. Mr. Ker cites a passage from one of the Reports of the Criminal Law Commissioners, which contains the following reasons for preferring a digest to a code:—

'A written exposition of the law, although necessarily involving a careful and laborious selection, correction, and preparation of the general rules in which it is embodied, comprises no further alteration than this—that what was before to be collected by the aid of precedent and analogy, is now to be judged of by reference to the written rule; the same sense is still attached to well-known technical forms of expression, and consequently all the benefit derived from the continued and familiar use of such expressions is retained. To the formation of new laws, which are to supersede an ancient system to any considerable extent, much inconvenience naturally attaches. In framing an entire new law, the temptation occurs to frame it in very concise, general, and abstract terms. It frequently, however, happens that the limit of so general a law is uncertain, and it is a matter of experience that great difficulty arises in their practical application, and that subsidiary supplemental laws become absolutely necessary for the removing of doubts.'

'I may refer those who think a plain and clear exposition of the law impossible to the very successful attempt of the Commissioners to digest the New York statutes. In the execution of this work the Commissioners added definitions of the common law,

'as far as it was necessary for their purpose; and I have reason to know, from the very highest authority, that this digest has worked well for more than twenty years, and has given rise to comparatively little doubt or difficulty, although I am told it was received with much ill-will and suspicion by the older practitioners when it first came into operation. I have given a sample of this work in the Appendix—not as a pattern as to how I would propose to have such a task executed, but as a proof, at least, that a successful attempt has been made by enlightened people, having a system of law nearly similar to our own, and which has enabled them to get rid of a vast mass of useless and complex law, totally inapplicable to the present times. Surely it is at least worth while to make the attempt. It may be well to state to those who are against this project, what perhaps has never occurred to them, viz. that, in fact, we ourselves already have a statutory digest of some of the most important branches of the law of property; for instance, the whole law relating to the power of disposition by will, and even some material points as to the construction of wills, is contained in the Wills Act and Lord St. Leonards' amendment of it. The whole law relating to the barring entails and the disposition of real property by married women is contained in Mr. Brodie's Act. The act introduced by your Lordship, preventing the destruction of contingent remainders, and other material points relating to the law of real property, is alone a proof of what may be done for the definition and simplification of the law of real property, if only care and skill are applied to the subject. Again: the law of dower and inheritance, and the several statutes as regards procedure for the recovery of land, the statutes of limitation, the laws relating to the commutation of tithes, the enfranchisement of copyholds, are all chapters of a digest of the law of real property; and if it has been found expedient and advantageous to make these desultory alterations in the law of property, I think it is fair to infer that greater benefit would arise from a systematic complete digest of the whole.

'Assuming that the digest is made, then will come the time to judge as to what alterations, what simplifications, are necessary. I assume that it will be determined to retain the present actual control over property both by deed and will, the present law of descent, the present distinction between real and personal estate, but that all else will be done to simplify the law, so as that these conditions be in nowise interfered with.' (P. 26).

'I have very lately had communication with one of the New York judges, and from him I learn that the revised statutes are found entirely to answer their end, both as regards the actual exposition of the law, and the great convenience which is experienced when it becomes necessary to alter the existing law, by reason of there being only one statute for each subject; and further, I learn that little or no difficulty occurs in the construction or exposition of these laws, and that no inconvenience arises from a portion of the common law having been consolidated with the statutory provisions.' (P. 69).

'I am certain that the time is come for the change, and that the evil of the existing state of things cannot be borne much longer; yet there are two difficulties which stare the most sanguine in the face. Few persons have hitherto turned their minds to the science of the construction of laws, and hitherto it has been the custom to pay the judges highly for the exposition of the law, whilst the framer of it is sought for the nonce, and is either ill remunerated, or there is an understanding that his work is to be taken into consideration on the next vacancy on the bench, &c. If great changes in the law are to be systematically made,

"the most skilful persons must be employed, and Parliament must be content to pay them." (P. 70).

The proposal is bold, and will probably be received with derision by a majority, both in numbers and in learning, of the Profession; yet we have no doubt that the necessity for a digest or digests, not merely of the law of real property, but of every branch of the law, will in a few years be generally acknowledged. The statute law has been already taken in hand with some prospect of success; and no one, we presume, will be so hardy as to assert, that if ten or twelve first-rate lawyers were induced to devote their whole time to the task, they could not in the course of as many years extract from the existing chaos of authorities all the principles and rules that they are capable of affording, and arrange and present them in a systematic form, disengaged from all "accidents and concretions." No doubt, in the operation, besides designed changes, many existing niceties and crotchets would be unintentionally swept away. But the race of Pigots, who weep over the ruins of legal cobwebs, is nearly extinct. Doubtless, too, many questions would arise on the construction of the digest, but they would replace* ten times as many questions on the present authorities. Thus the law would be rendered many times more certain, and a thousand times more intelligible and accessible, than it now is. If the plan were adopted of inserting every new enactment in its place in the digest, expunging the repealed or altered clauses; and if Courts, in pronouncing their judgments, expressly referred to the clause or clauses in the digest on which they proceeded; and if no reported decision were allowed to be cited as a precedent affecting the construction or application of any clause in the digest not so referred to, there might be some hope of preventing the return of chaos for a few centuries.

PUBLIC EXAMINATION.—MICHAELMAS TERM, 1853.

The Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

* The plan would be to have, first, a digest of the existing law, strictly without alteration or amendment, stating, if thought necessary, cases of authorities in balanced conflict, without deciding between them; and then a separate amended digest or code. The latter would decide all cases arising after its enactment; the former all cases which ought not to be affected by an ex post facto law.

"No student shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Michaelmas Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs, on or before Monday, the 31st day of October next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Monday, the 7th day of November next, and will be continued on the Tuesday and Wednesday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Monday morning, the 7th November, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Tuesday morning, the 8th November, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Wednesday morning, the 9th November, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Wednesday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than ten terms shall not be admitted to an examination.

THE READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW and LEGAL HISTORY will expect all students to answer any general questions relating to the History of England, and to be well acquainted with the reigns of Henry VII, Henry VIII, Elizabeth, James I, and Charles I.

The books for the ordinary examination will be Hallam, Rapin, and Blackstone.

LONDON, AUGUST 13, 1853.

We call the attention of our conveyancing readers to a very important decision (not yet reported) on the subject of warrants of attorney to confess judgment, with reference to the law of usury. In the case of Lane v. Horlock, decided by Sir R. T. Kindersley, V.C., during the last month, money had been advanced by Lane to Horlock on bills of exchange; but in the negotiations for the advance, Lane had insisted that he must have, in addition, a warrant of attorney, on which judgment might be immediately entered up and registered; and he required to be furnished with a copy of Horlock's rental, and a valuation of his real estate, and of all the incumbrances on it. Being satisfied with this investigation of Horlock's real estate, Lane advanced the money, and Horlock executed a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, to secure the repayment of the money advanced. The money was, of course, it will be understood, lent at usurious interest, and judgment was entered up the day following the advance.

Under circumstances and by various transactions which it would not here be useful to detail, part of Horlock's real estate was sold, and the loans not being repaid, the question was, whether Lane could claim to be repaid out of the produce of such sale; and that turned on the question, whether the warrant of attorney, followed by the judgment so immediately entered up, was a security on land within the proviso of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37.

lock's real estate was sold, and the loans not being repaid, the question was, whether Lane could claim to be repaid out of the produce of such sale; and that turned on the question, whether the warrant of attorney, followed by the judgment so immediately entered up, was a security on land within the proviso of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37.

That the transaction would have been within the old Usury Act (the statute of Anne) was not disputed; but it was argued that this was not a security on land; that the judgment was the only security on land, and that was not given at the time of the advance; that the only instrument affecting the land given at the time of the advance was the warrant of attorney, which was confessedly of itself no security on land; that to be within the statute, the loan or forbearance must be upon security of land; and therefore, the warrant of attorney not being itself a security on land, and the judgment not being given till after the advance was completed, there was no loan or forbearance of money on the security of land.

It will of course occur to every conveyancer, that assuming, as one must assume, the policy of the law to exclude land from being resorted to, to secure usurious loans, the law would be of the most entire inefficacy for that purpose if such a trick as taking a warrant of attorney one hour, and a judgment the next, could be held to be taking no security on land; because the practical danger of anything intervening to prevent the warrant of attorney being ripened into an actual charge on land would be so homœopathic in its proportions that there would be no appreciable difference, as regards security, between such a transaction and a mortgage. Of course such a reason could not be conclusive if the language of the statute admitted no doubt, but it would have great weight if the language of the statute would not be inconsistent with it.

The Court would probably not have felt much difficulty on the subject had it not been for a case of Lane v. Horlock, which was between the very same parties, and in respect of the very same transaction in which the Court of Queen's Bench refused to set aside the judgment on the ground of usury. (4 Dowl. & L. 408).

The learned Vice-Chancellor, in deciding the more recent case, commented on the case in the Queen's Bench, and said that he could not concur in the reasons on which that case was decided; and he then proceeded to decide on a ground which he thought would be consistent with the decision in the Queen's Bench.

The ground on which he decided was, that the statute of Victoria did not intend that the agreeing, on a usurious loan, to give landed security, should invalidate the whole transaction, but only to render the intended security on land invalid; and for this view he relied on Ex parte Warrington, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 430). His Honor accordingly held, that although Lane's judgment was a good judgment, and might be executed as against the debtor's personal estate, yet it was invalid as a security on the land, and could not be enforced as a lien on the produce of the sale of the land.

Acquiescing entirely, if we may respectfully say so, in the decision of the learned Vice-Chancellor, that such a judgment cannot be enforced against land, we take leave, with great respect, to observe, that it appears to us not to be consistent with, but entirely to overrule, Lane v. Horlock in the Queen's Bench.

No doubt what the statute does is to give first a universal exemption from the consequences of usury to every loan, however secured, and then to except from that universality the security of land; but is it correct, firstly, to say that the proviso excepts only the security, and does not affect the loan made or attempted to be made on the forbidden security?—and if it is correct to say that, then, secondly, does the proviso except only land from the security, or does it not at any rate destroy the security itself given upon land? If the first point is decided in Ex parte Warrington, which appears to us at least doubtful, the second certainly is not; because in that case the question was not whether the mortgage was good—it clearly and admittedly was not, for any purpose—but whether, being bad, it invalidated the promissory notes. The utmost that it decided was, that the proviso in the statute did not render a loan, made on the double security of personalty and land, altogether a void loan. It certainly did not decide that the exception only paralysed the security given on land, as to its hold upon the land, and left it as a security subsisting for other purposes. Now, the decision in Lane v. Horlock before the Vice-Chancellor does go that length; it says that the judgment, which, ex concessis, it treats as a security on land, is not a judgment as against land, but is otherwise a good judgment; whereas the case at common law treats it as a good judgment in the whole, because it is not a security upon land. It seems to us, therefore, that Ex parte Warrington is not an authority for Lane v. Horlock before the Vice-Chancellor, and that the latter case does overrule Lane v. Horlock in the Queen's Bench.

PROTECTION FROM JUDGMENTS, &c.— FREER v. HESSE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The case of Freer v. Hesse, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 177), which was discussed a few months ago in THE JURIST, (ante, pp. 91, 98, 105, 123), has assumed a new aspect on the appeal before the Lords Justices. (Freer v. Hesse, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 703). The case before Sir J. Stuart, V.C., was, that the vendor, in January, 1844, had taken a mortgage in fee of an estate, described as consisting of 24 acres of freehold and 26 perches of copyhold land, but the copyhold part of which amounted to 0A. 3R. 29P.; and he sold under a power in his mortgage, making the usual provision for compensation in case of misdescription. The purchaser objected to complete unless two judgments against the mortgagor, which had been registered respectively on the 6th May and 28th November, 1843, were discharged. The vendor stated that he had no notice of the judgments when he took his mortgage, and his statement was not impeached. He also relied on a satisfied term of 1000 years, created in 1818, which, on taking the mortgage, he procured to be assigned to a trustee for him. The vendor filed a bill for specific performance. Pending the reference as to title, one of the judgments was, in November, 1850, re-registered. The Master reported in favour of the title to the freehold part only. The Vice-Chancellor decreed a specific performance, with compensation for the defect as to the copyhold, being of opinion, as to the freehold, that the re-registration of the judgment was too late, more than five years having elapsed since the previous registration; and that, even if the judgment had been properly registered, the term would be a sufficient protection to the purchaser.

On the opening of the appeal, the Court intimated that the question as to the judgment was one of conveyance, which could not properly be discussed at that stage of the cause; but, on the consent of both parties, that irregularity was waived. It does not appear how the question as to the copyhold was decided; but the important part of the decision was, that the title, without the concurrence of the judgment creditor, was too doubtful to be forced on the purchaser. The opinion of the Vice-Chancellor, as to the effect of omitting to register the judgment within five years, was not sanctioned by the Court of Appeal. But Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, L.J., seems to have thought it not quite clear, that the existence of the purchaser's equitable title under the contract at the expiration of the five years did not take the estate out of the operation of the judgment altogether. The act 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 4, says that registered judgments "shall, after the expiration of five years from the date of the entry thereof, be null and void, against lands, tenements, and hereditaments, as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, unless a like memorandum is left &c., within five years before the expiration of the conveyance, settlement, mortgage, lease, or other deed or instrument vesting or transferring the legal or equitable right, title, estate, or interest in or to any such purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, or, as to creditors, within five years before the right of such creditors accrued; and so toties quoties," &c. Here is no allusion to contracts, and the question could not have arisen if "equitable rights" had not been mentioned. But the wording of the clause is clearly adverse to the supposition that contracts were contemplated. As between the vendor and the purchaser, the equitable title, no doubt, passes for many purposes upon the execution of the contract, though the vendor has a lien on the estate for the pur-has money, and the judgment binds that lien. But, as regards third persons, the purchaser is not in any case a purchaser for valuable consideration until he has paid the purchase money. This is proved by adding the qualification, "without notice." A purchaser for valuable consideration without notice is a purchaser who had no notice when he paid for the estate, not a purchaser who had no notice when he entered into the contract. (See Potter v. Sanders, 6 Hare, 1). His Lordship suggested that great inconvenience might arise from holding that a purchaser could not have the benefit of the act until he had completed his purchase and taken a conveyance. I submit, with great deference, that no inconvenience could arise from that construction, because, up to the moment of completion, the purchaser considers that he is exposed to the risk of judgment being registered against his vendor, and therefore he always searches immediately before completion.

Assuming that the registration was sufficient, his Lordship thought that the protection from the term was not perfectly clear. The purchaser had notice of the judgment, and therefore could not rely on the judgment unless his vendor had a right to rely on it. That depended on the fact of the mortgage having been taken without notice of the judgment. If the vendor had appropriated the benefit of the term (before the late act) without notice of the judgment, the Court, sanctioning the construction of the Attendant Terms Act which I ventured to advocate in my former communication, (and see Bas v. Welsted, 12 Jur., part 1, p. 347), assumed that a purchaser from him would be entitled to the same protection. But the absence of notice was not capable of direct proof, and as there was no instance of a title depending on the mere absence of notice being forced on a purchaser, the Court declined to order the purchaser to complete without the concurrence of the judgment creditor.

The point is undoubtedly one of considerable nicety. I had always thought that it should be decided the other way. There is no process in the nature of an interpleader suit, by which either the purchaser or the vendor in such a case can compel the incumbrancer to elect whether he will come in and litigate the question of notice, or abandon his lien; and therefore the result of the decision in Freer v. Hesse is, that a purchaser without notice of an incumbrance is held in equity to be the absolute owner of the estate, without one of the chief incidents of ownership, the power of sale. The Court in Freer v. Hesse professed to be acting on the doctrine of equity as to doubtful titles. That doctrine, however, is founded on a regard to the interests of the purchaser. But under the circumstances in Freer v. Hesse, I should have thought, but for the decision in that case, that the purchaser might have completed without any risk. The purchaser would have been bound to complete, as in the case of dower, if the term had been a certain protection. He had notice of a judgment, it is true; but the question was, had he notice of any judgment binding the term in equity? I submit that he had not. The judgment could not bind the term in equity unless the mortgagee had knowledge of the judgment when he appropriated the term. The purchaser, so far from having notice of such a state of things, had every reason to believe the contrary. He therefore had no notice of any judgment lien affecting the term, and therefore his purchase of the protected estate would have been a purchase without notice of any lien of the judgment creditor affecting it, and would not have been impeachable by the creditor. On this ground I venture to submit that the decision is not satisfactory.

The case furnishes an important suggestion on a point as to which the practice of conveyancers has not been uniform. Copyholds and leaseholds in the hands of purchasers without notice are not bound by judgments against their vendors, and it has, therefore, been the practice of many gentlemen not to advise searches for judgments against vendors of such estates. But that practice must be abandoned, for though a purchaser of a copyhold or leasehold is not bound by a judgment of which he had no notice when he took his conveyance, his title would, according to Freer v. Hesse, be unmarketable, if registered judgments against his vendor should afterwards appear to have been subsisting at the date of the purchase, and to be unsatisfied. G. S.

written by him. This evidence was rejected; but when the family solicitor stated that he had acquired a knowledge of the writing from having examined, in the course of business, many deeds purporting to have been written by the ancestor, and which came to the claimant together with property formerly belonging to that ancestor, he was held competent to prove the writing. The question, whether writings not admissible as evidence in the cause, but purporting to be written by the party whose handwriting is disputed, may be put into a witness's hand for the purpose of testing his knowledge of the party's handwriting, was decided by the Court of Queen's Bench in the negative; (Griffiths v. Ivory, 11 Ad. & El. 322); but this decision was dissented from in the Exchequer. (Young v. Honner, 2 Moo. & R. 536; and see Hughes v. Rogers, 8 M. & W. 125).

The conclusion at which the Commissioners arrive is, that the comparison of a disputed writing with writings acknowledged to be genuine (and when used by the party in whose handwriting they are, if written ante litem motam) should be permitted to be made by witnesses, and that such writings should be submitted to the jury as evidence as to the genuineness of the writings in dispute.

The impolicy of making the claims of justice depend upon the interests of the revenue does not escape the notice of the Commissioners, and although the scope of their authority does not permit them to suggest the only complete remedy, which would be the severance of the connexion between revenue and the administration of justice, yet their recommendations, if carried out, would tend to mitigate the evils of the present system. They propose that the officer of the Court, at Nisi Prius, should call the attention of the judge to any omission or insufficiency of a stamp, and that such officer should be empowered to affix the necessary stamp on payment of the penalty and duty. As an inducement to parties not to attempt to evade the law, it might (they add) be provided that the penalty, if paid at the trial, should be somewhat higher than if paid at the Stamp-office. They do not, however, intend to interfere with such instruments as bills of exchange and receipts, which, if not stamped at the time of their execution, cannot be afterwards stamped, even on payment of a penalty. We may here observe, that by a bill now before Parliament it is proposed to affix a uniform penny stamp on all receipts for sums above 2*l.*, as well as on all bills payable on demand to bearer or to order.

We trust that bills of exchange will be taken out of the operation of the stamp laws altogether, or, at all events, placed in the same category as the other documents which the officer at Nisi Prius may stamp at the trial. It is monstrous that it should lie in the mouth of a party, who has put his name to an instrument, to say that he evaded the law relating to stamps, and therefore he is to escape all liability to the parties who supplied goods or advanced money on the faith of such instrument.

We understand that the suggestions of the learned Commissioners upon the Law of Evidence*, all of which we have now considered, will be embodied in the bill for improving such law which has come down from the House of Lords to the House of Commons, but that the remainder of the report will not be brought before the Legislature until next session.

10. Extent of Act.

Whereas the present law has been found insufficient for the protection of women and children from violent assaults: be it enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. When any person shall be charged before two justices of the peace sitting at a place where the petty sessions are usually held, or before any magistrate of the police courts of the metropolis sitting at any such police court, or before any stipendiary magistrate elsewhere, with an assault upon any female whatever, or upon any male child whose age shall not, in the opinion of such justices or police or stipendiary magistrates, exceed fourteen years, either upon the complaint of the party aggrieved or otherwise, it shall be lawful for the said justices or police or stipendiary magistrate, if the assault is of such an aggravated nature that it cannot, in their or his opinion, be sufficiently punished under the provisions of the stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, to proceed to hear and determine in a summary way, and if they shall find the same to be proved, to convict the person accused; and every offender so convicted shall be liable to be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction, with or without hard labour, for a period not exceeding six calendar months, or to pay a fine not exceeding (together with costs) the sum of 20*l.*, and in default of payment to be imprisoned as aforesaid, with or without hard labour, for a period not exceeding six calendar months, unless such fine and costs be sooner paid, and if the magistrate or magistrates shall so think fit, shall be bound to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for any period not exceeding six calendar months from the expiration of such sentence; and such conviction shall be a bar to all future proceedings, civil or criminal, for or in respect of the same assault; and no person convicted under this act shall be entitled to appeal against such conviction to the general quarter sessions of the peace, anything to the contrary in any statute notwithstanding.

2. Where any recognisance to keep the peace or to be of good behaviour is entered into by any person, as principal or surety, before the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace of any county, riding, division, city, borough, or place, or before any justice or justices of the peace of any county, riding, division, city, borough, or place, it shall be lawful for any such court of general or quarter sessions of the peace as aforesaid, upon applications made to such court, to declare such recognisance to be forfeited, upon proof of a conviction of the party bound by such recognisance of any offence which is in law a breach of the condition of the same; and upon further proof that a notice in writing, signed by the person seeking to put such recognisance in force, has, seven clear days before the commencement of such sessions, been personally served upon or left at the usual place of abode of the party or each of the parties (if more than one) who entered into such recognisances, that an application will be made to the said general or quarter sessions, that the said recognisance shall be declared forfeited; and if such recognisance shall be declared forfeited, all such proceedings shall be had thereon as in the case of a recognisance forfeited at such court of general or quarter sessions, and all the provisions of the 3 Geo. 4, c. 46, and of the 4 Geo. 4, c. 37, applicable to a recognisance so forfeited at such court, shall apply to a recognisance which shall, upon such application and proof as hereinbefore mentioned, be declared to be forfeited; and upon notice in writing of such intended application to the said general or quarter sessions being given to any justice or justices, before whom any such recognisance shall have been taken, four clear days before the commencement of the said sessions, the said justice or justices shall transmit the said recognisance to the clerk of the peace of the county, riding, division, city, borough, or place within which the said recognisance shall have been taken, with a certificate that the said recognisance is sent to him by reason of such last-mentioned notice having been so given as aforesaid.

3. No person committed to prison under any warrant or order of one justice of the peace, for or on account of not entering into recognisances or finding sureties to keep the peace or to be of good behaviour, shall be detained under such warrant or order for more than twelve calendar months from the time of such commitment.

4. And whereas, by reason of the establishment of a court of criminal appeal, the removal of indictments by writ of certiorari is seldom necessary for the decision of questions of law, but is nevertheless sometimes resorted to for purposes of expense and delay: be it enacted, that no indictment, except indictments against bodies corporate not authorised to appear by attorney in the court in which the indictment is preferred, shall be removed into the Court of Queen's Bench, or into the Central Criminal Court, by writ of certiorari, either at the instance of the prosecutor or of the defendant, (other than the Attorney-General acting on behalf of the Crown), unless it be made to appear to the Court from which the writ is to issue, by the party applying for the same, that a fair and impartial trial of the case cannot be had in the court below, or that some question of law of more than usual difficulty and importance is likely to arise upon the trial, or that a view of the premises in respect whereof any indictment is preferred, or a special jury, may be required for the satisfactory trial of the same.

5. And whereas it is expedient to make further provision for preventing the vexatious removal of indictments into the Court of Queen's Bench: be it therefore enacted, that whenever any writ of certiorari to remove an indictment into the said court shall be awarded at the instance of a defendant or defendants, the recognisance now by law required to be entered into before the allowance of such writ shall contain the farther provision following; that is to say, that the defendant or defendants, in case he or they shall be convicted, shall pay to the prosecutor his costs incurred subsequent to the removal of such indictment; and whenever any such writ of certiorari shall be awarded at the instance of the prosecutor, the said prosecutor shall enter into a recognisance (to be acknowledged in like manner as is now required in cases of writs of certiorari awarded at the instance of a defendant) with the condition following; that is to say, that the said prosecutor shall pay to the defendant or defendants, in case he or they shall be acquitted, his or their costs incurred subsequent to such removal.

6. The costs hereinbefore respectively mentioned shall be taxed according to the course of the Court of Queen's Bench; and for the recovery thereof the persons entitled thereto shall, at the expiration of ten days after demand made of the person or persons at whose instance the writ of certiorari was awarded, and on oath made of such demand and refusal of payment, have a writ of attachment granted against him or them by the Court of Queen's Bench for such contempt; and the said Court shall and may also order the said recognisance to be estreated into the Exchequer.

7. If the person or persons at whose instance any writ of certiorari shall be awarded shall not, before the allowance thereof, enter into such recognisance as is hereinbefore provided, the Court to which such writ may be directed shall and may proceed to the trial of the indictment, as if such writ of certiorari had not been awarded.

8. This act shall not extend to any writ of certiorari awarded at the instance of her Majesty's Attorney-General.

9. It shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, or any judge of the Court of Queen's Bench or Common Pleas, or any baron of the Exchequer, in any case where he may see fit to do so, upon application by affidavit, to issue a warrant or order under his hand for bringing up any prisoner or person confined in any gaol, prison, or place, under any sentence or under commitment for trial or otherwise, (except under process in any civil action, suit, or proceeding), before any court, judge, justice, or other judicature, to be examined as a witness in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, depending, or to be inquired of, or determined in or before such court, judge, justice, or judicature; and the person required by any such warrant or order to be so brought before any such court, judge, justice, or other judicature shall be so brought under the same care and custody, and be dealt with in like manner in all respects, as a prisoner required by any writ of habeas corpus awarded by any of her Majesty's superior Courts of law at Westminster to be brought before such Court to be examined as a witness in any cause or matter depending before such Court is now by law required to be dealt with.

10. This act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

CAP. XXXI.

An Act to apply the Sum of Four Millions out of the Consolidated Fund to the Service of the Year 1853.

[14th June, 1853.]

CAP. XXXII.

An Act to make further Provision for staying Execution of Judgment for Misdemeanours upon giving Bail in Error.

[28th June, 1853.]

- Sect. 1. No Execution to be stayed or Defendant discharged from Custody till Recognisance given for Defendant's personal Appearance, except when Writ brought by Attorney-General.*
- 2. Where Default in personal Appearance of Defendant on the Argument, Court may order Recognisance to be estreated, and Writ of Error to be quashed.*
- 3. No Judgment to be given for Defendant for Want of a Joinder in Error, except by Order of the Court in open Court; and Court may examine Record, and give Judgment, though no Assignment of Errors filed.*
- 4. Where Judgment affirmed, Defendant, if present in Court, may be committed in Execution.*
- 5. Where Recognisance has been estreated, or Judgment affirmed, or Writ of Error quashed, a Judge may issue Warrant to take Defendant, and render him to Prison in Execution.*
- 6. How Time of Imprisonment shall be reckoned when Defendant rendered in Execution.*
- 7. If Default be made in rendering Defendant to Prison, and Warrant be issued against him, he shall pay the Costs and Charges of the Render.*
- 8. Where Default made by Defendant in proceeding to Trial in Queen's Bench, Court may estreat Recognisance without Scire Facias.*

Whereas by an act passed in the 8 & 9 Vict. [c. 68], intitled "An Act to stay Execution of Judgment for Misdemeanours upon giving Bail in Error," it is amongst other things provided that no execution upon any such judgment shall be stayed unless and until the defendant or defendants shall become bound by recognisance to prosecute the writ of error with effect, and in case the judgment shall be affirmed, forthwith to render the defendant or defendants to prison, according to the said judgment, where imprisonment shall have been adjudged: and whereas it is expedient to make further provision for securing the render of a defendant to prison, according to the judgment given against him, when such judgment shall have been affirmed, or such writ of error shall have been quashed: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. In every case in which a writ of error shall be brought to reverse any judgment for misdemeanour, except when the same shall be brought by her Majesty's Attorney-General, no execution thereupon shall be stayed, nor shall any defendant be discharged from imprisonment as to such execution, unless and until he shall become bound by recognisance, to be acknowledged in manner in the said act mentioned, to prosecute the writ of error with effect, and personally to appear in the court wherein such writ may be returnable on the day whereon judgment shall be given upon the said writ of error, and also, if so ordered by the court or by a judge thereof, four days' notice being given either to the defendant or his attorney or to the bail personally, or by leaving the same at his or their last known place of abode on the days and times appointed for any proceeding upon the said writ, and so from day to day, and not to depart that court without leave, and forthwith to render the said defendant to prison, according to the said judgment, in case the said judgment shall be affirmed.

2. In every case in which a defendant shall make default in prosecuting such writ of error with effect, or in personally appearing in the court of error upon any proceeding to be had upon such writ of error as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said Court to order the said recognisance to be estreated into the Court of Exchequer in a summary way, and without the issuing of any writ of scire facias in that behalf, and also to order the said writ of error to be quashed, without any argument being had thereupon; and in every such case the defendant shall forthwith be liable to execution upon the judgment.

3. Whenever any writ of error shall be brought, under the provisions of the said act, for reversing any judgment in misdemeanour, and error shall be assigned thereon, no judgment of reversal shall be entered, either for want of a joinder in error or otherwise, without the special order of the Court in which such writ of error shall be pending, pronounced in open court; and upon a certificate, signed by or on behalf of the Attorney or Solicitor General, that notice has been given to one of them of such intended application, and in the event of there being no joinder in error, such Court of error may proceed to examine the record in error, and may give such judgment thereon as the Court from which error is brought ought to have done, although no joinder in error may have been filed.

4. In every case in which a defendant shall personally appear in court upon any proceeding had upon any such writ of error, and judgment thereupon shall be affirmed, or such writ of error shall be quashed, it shall be lawful for such Court of error forthwith to commit the said defendant to the keeper of the Queen's Prison, and to order the said keeper to deliver such defendant to the keeper of the gaol or prison in which he may have been adjudged to be imprisoned; and the said keeper of the Queen's Prison shall thereupon deliver such defendant to the keeper of such gaol or prison, and the keeper of such last-mentioned gaol or prison shall thereupon cause such defendant to be kept in safe custody in such gaol or prison, in pursuance of and in execution of the said judgment.

5. And whenever it shall be made to appear to any one of the judges of the superior courts of record at Westminster, either by affidavit or by certificate of the proper officer of the court of error, that the recognisance of a defendant given under the provisions of this act hath been ordered to be estreated, or that judgment upon the said writ hath been affirmed, or that such writ of error hath been quashed, and that default hath been made by the space of four days in rendering the defendant to prison in execution of the judgment, it shall be lawful for such judge to issue his warrant under his hand and seal, and thereby to cause such defendant to be apprehended, and conveyed to the gaol or prison in which such defendant may have been adjudged to be imprisoned, pursuant to and in execution of the judgment given against such defendant.

6. In every case in which a defendant shall be committed by any Court of error, in execution of the judgment given against such defendant, and in every case in which a defendant shall, by virtue of any warrant or in other manner, be rendered to prison in execution of such judgment, the imprisonment of such defendant (if imprisonment shall not have commenced under such execution) shall be reckoned to begin from the day when such defendant shall be in actual custody in the gaol or prison in which he may have been adjudged to be imprisoned under such judgment; and if the defendant shall have been discharged from imprisonment on giving bail in error, as is hereinbefore mentioned, such defendant shall be imprisoned for such further period in the same prison as, with the time during which such defendant may already have been imprisoned under such execution, shall be equal to the period for which he was adjudged to be imprisoned as aforesaid.

7. Whenever default shall have been made in rendering a defendant to prison in execution of a judgment for misdemeanour, and a warrant shall have been issued against such defendant to enforce such render to prison, according to the provisions of this act, such defendant shall be liable to pay the costs and charges of such render; and if the prosecutor shall, before the expiration of the defendant's imprisonment, have caused the amount of such costs and charges to be ascertained by one of the Masters or the Assistant Master on the crown side of the Court of Queen's Bench, and shall have left with the said defendant, and with the keeper of the prison or his deputy, a certificate, under the hand of such Master or Assistant Master, of the amount of such costs so ascertained, then and in every such last-mentioned case the defendant shall not be discharged out of custody until such costs and charges have been paid, or until an order has been made by the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors or of Bankruptcy for such discharge.

8. And whereas, in cases of default made by parties in performing the conditions of recognisances into which they may have entered to proceed to the trial of issues joined upon any indictment or information filed in her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench, it hath been the usage and practice to enforce the forfeiture of such recognisances by writ of scire facias, and the course of procedure by scire facias in such cases is dilatory, inconvenient, and expensive: be it therefore enacted, that in every such case of default it shall be lawful for the said court, or a judge thereof, to call upon the parties who have entered into such recognisance, by rule or order to shew cause why such recognisance should not be estreated into the Exchequer, and thereupon, unless cause shall be shewn to the satisfaction of the said court or judge, in excuse of such default, such court or judge may order such recognisance to be estreated into the Exchequer.

MR. BELLENDEN KER, in his pamphlet on the Reform of the Law of Real Property*, has the following passage:—

"Another, and to my mind most important, subject for consideration in any scheme for improvement is the effect of the jurisdiction of Courts of equity on the law of property. A very cursory review will shew that this, in many cases, has been injurious to the well working of a system of law relating to property founded on the common law and the statutes. From time to time doctrines have been admitted which have tended to render the system more complex—to give rise to doubts which lead to endless suits. I take, for example, the relief afforded by equity as regards contracts not made in conformity with the Statute of Frauds, which provides that all contracts relating to land shall be in writing—thus, in fact, in certain cases, setting that statutory law at naught. And it is curious to observe the evils which have arisen, as regards the Middlesex and Yorkshire registries, as to the admission of the very vague doctrine of notice, which prevents a purchaser from availing himself of the protection of the registry, on the assumption that, having notice of a charge, he was bound by it, though it was not on the registry. This at first sight appears just, viz. that a purchaser should not be protected by the registry—that is, if he had notice that the man from whom he purchased had sold or settled the land, although this sale or settlement is not shewn on the registry, it would seem fair that he should not be allowed to purchase that which he knew was sold or mortgaged before. But when difficulties arise in considering what shall be or shall not be notice, what is constructive notice, what was sufficient to set a party on such an inquiry as would have led to notice, what notice to an agent would bind the principal, &c., the result is, that little reliance is put in the registry. It would be endless to discuss this point—its evils have been well illustrated in the second Report of the Real Property Commissioners, and also in that of the Commissioners on Registration. The evil as to the allowing the doctrine of notice to affect a purchaser was so completely felt by the framer of the act for the registry of ships, that it is expressly provided that a purchaser shall not be affected by anything not on the registry. The result is, that a simple and complete mode of transfer is established, the form pointed out by the law is adhered to, no question arises, and, as regards the disposition of this species of property, no difficulties occur.

"Again: there was another point on which the interference of a Court of equity led to doubt and difficulty. A person having a power of distribution of a fund amongst children or others, in such shares as he should think fit, was held to be bound to exercise this power with discretion—that is, he might not give 6*l.* to one child, and 10,000*l.* to another. This was called an illusory exercise of the power; although in some special cases he might make an unequal distribution, if circumstances warranted it, as one child being amply provided for aliunde; &c. But then a Court of equity said each case must stand on its own merits. The result was, that persons advising were involved in endless doubts—suits arose by children to have illusory appointments set aside. At last the evil was so intolerable, that a law was introduced by Lord St. Leonards to do away with the interference of the Courts of equity, and to allow the power being exercised according to the terms of its constitution.

“Again: under the old law, a man could not dispose of copyholds by his will, unless he had first made a surrender to such uses as he should by will appoint. This was frequently omitted to be done, and hence the wishes of the testator were often disappointed. Here again equity interfered, and, in some respects, in a capricious manner. It would, in certain cases, compel the heir, who took the copyhold by reason of there having been no surrender, to surrender the property as the testator had intended it should go. It compelled this, in most cases, in favour of a wife, children, or creditors. In other cases, if the heir took under the will some provision, and he refused to let the copyholds go according to the disposition of the will, although it had not been duly surrendered, the Court said the heir should not blow hot and cold, and made him give up the copyholds, to go as by the will was intended. And hence arose all kinds of subtleties and difficulties about supplying, surrendering to the uses of a will, and the doctrine of election. A book was written on the latter subject alone; and even Lord Eldon found the subject one of great difficulty to deal with.

“I do not attempt to go into details on the exact state of this very complex branch of equity. At last, as in the former case, it was found so inconvenient, that a law was passed taking away the necessity of having the surrender to the use of the will; and thus a large class of doubtful and difficult cases were subtracted from the consideration of equity, and a more simple state of the law introduced; the testator's intention not, as before this change, frustrated, or, if carried out, only done so by a circuitous and expensive suit. Again: the evil of the possible interference of equity was foreseen by the framers of the Fines and Recoveries Act; and there the interference of equity as to any control over the protector of the settlement is expressly negatived. I might, without end, multiply instances where the interference of equity has tended to render the law of property more complex and doubtful, and where, in fact, in many cases, the result has been anything but beneficial. I think it is enough that I shew evils have heretofore been discovered, which it has been considered advisable to remedy, to entitle me to suggest, that further search and inquiry should be made to see whether any similar evils or inconveniences yet exist to which it would be expedient to apply similar remedies.

“I am not alone in my notions as to the great laxity of the Court of equity in allowing exceptions from the Statute of Frauds in the construction of contracts. This was expressly adverted to by the Real Property Commissioners as an evil; and yet little or nothing has been done as regards doctrines of a Court of equity, as applicable to this branch of the law. With respect to the effect of the decisions of Courts of equity on the law of property, no one but the conveyancer can judge of the great increase of the evil which has arisen from the increase of the number of the courts of equity. This was foreseen by Sir Samuel Romilly. There are now three Vice-Chancellors, a Master of the Rolls, the Courts of the Lords Justices and the Lord Chancellor, and the House of Lords; and the reports recording the judgments of all these courts are daily pouring in on the practitioner, who is to steer his client, when purchasing an estate, absolutely clear of every one of these decisions. And then come the appeals, the reversals—the fear of a future appeal, and the reversal of some doctrine on which the adviser of a purchaser may be inclined to rely; and hence the caution, the doubts, the difficulties, the refusal to perform a contract for purchase without the express sanction of a Court of equity. But even with all this caution the adviser feels he is never absolutely safe. There is a fashion in construction and in the administration of principles of equity relating to property, as well as in other things, and what is law to-day is not law to-morrow. I might cite various instances of this.”

Now, these strictures on the interference of Courts of equity are to some extent well grounded, but to a great extent they are without foundation. It is quite true that some of the equitable doctrines on which the Court of Chancery proceeds, in controlling the operation of rules of law in relation to real property, are carried to an extent which works confusion, and sometimes injustice; and of this class, no doubt, is its doctrine of constructive notice, as applied to registered titles. No one, not even Mr. Bellenden Ker, will deny that it is but just that a purchaser, with clear, positive, direct notice of an incumbrance, should not be permitted to use the register, not as a means of protection to himself against the consequences of a fraud, but as the means of defrauding another innocent person. So far the interference of equity is right and beneficial; but when it goes on to make a man liable to lose the benefit of his purchase, by declaring that because he has read one deed he shall be taken to know the contents of another; or that because his solicitor knew or might know something, therefore he constructively knows the same thing; it is then true that it lets in elements of confusion and doubt, and works frequent injustice.

But, on the other hand, the interference of equity against the effect of the Statute of Frauds, in cases of part performance, does not in the slightest degree deserve the censure cast upon it. The common sense of the statute was to insure proof of the real intention of the parties to a contract, and to avoid the uncertainty and confusion arising from the difficulty of parol evidence. But surely there can be no doubt or difficulty about intention when a party has actually done a substantive part of the thing; which it is alleged he agreed to do? When, for instance, a purchaser has paid the purchase money, or taken possession, and pulled down or erected buildings, what sense or justice would there be in allowing him to say that he never intended to contract, when he has done the very thing contracted to be done?

Again: with regard to the instance selected, of interference in regard to wills of copyholds, the censure should have been cast, not upon the Court of Chancery, but upon the neglect to improve by statute the shortcomings of the common law. It was monstrous that the application of a doctrine of tenure of the most intensely fusty antiquity should prevent the just intentions of a testator taking effect, and hence the equitable doctrines of supplying a surrender, and election, became absolutely necessary. That difficulties and subtleties arose in their application may be quite true. Whenever any positive rule requires to be controlled by exceptions, of necessity there arises some degree of difficulty in determining the nature and extent of the qualification. But the sin of these difficulties and subtleties lies at the door, not of the Court of Chancery, but of the common law, which maintained a positive rule so inapplicable to the wants of mankind.

We entirely agree with Mr. Ker, that there have been great evils in the state of the law in many cases in which the Courts of equity have interfered to control the effect of the common law; but he seems to us also entirely to mistake the cause of, and the remedy for, those evils. Their cause has been the neglect of the Legislature to remove old rules of law, become by the changes wrought by modern civilisation quite unendurable; and the remedy will be, not in simply forbidding the interference of equity, but in carrying out the doctrines of equity, and giving to them positive authority by legislative enactment.

The lament of the learned conveyancer about the mischief arising from the increase of the courts of equity, and the increase of labour to the counsel, is simply the expression of personal fatigue and weariness of an overworked man. That a conveyancer of Mr. Ker's eminence should so feel is perfectly natural; at the same time, he will find it difficult to persuade the public to return to the old state of the Court of Chancery, in order that a few overworked conveyancers may have rest.

Whereas it is desirable to improve the condition of the metropolitan stage and hackney carriages, and to alter and amend the system of licensing such carriages: be it therefore enacted &c. that—

Sect. 1. From and after the 1st October next every person desirous of obtaining a license to keep, use, and let to hire any metropolitan stage or hackney carriage, within the limits of this act, must apply in writing to the commissioners of police of the metropolis, in order that they may cause an inspection to be made of every carriage to be kept, used, or let to hire by virtue of such license, and upon such application the said commissioners shall cause an inspection to be made of every such carriage; and if such carriage or carriages shall be found by the said commissioners to be in a fit and proper condition for public use, they shall grant a certificate to that effect, and shall specify in such certificate the number of persons to be carried in and by such carriage, in the form given in Schedule (B.) to this act annexed, and upon production of such certificate at the office of the Board of Inland Revenue, a license shall be granted; but it shall not be lawful for the said Board of Inland Revenue to grant or issue any license for any metropolitan stage or hackney carriage, within the limits of this act, unless the person applying for the same shall produce such certificate as aforesaid.

2. It shall be lawful for the said commissioners of police to cause an inspection to be made, as often as they deem it necessary, of all metropolitan stage and hackney carriages, and of the horse or horses used in drawing the same, within the limits of this act; and if any such carriage, or the horse or horses used in drawing the same, shall at any time be in a condition unfit for public use, the said commissioners shall give notice in writing accordingly to the proprietor thereof, which notice shall be personally served on such proprietor, or delivered at his usual place of residence; and if, after notice as aforesaid, any proprietor shall use or let to hire such carriage as a metropolitan stage or hackney carriage, or use or let to hire such horse or horses whilst in a condition unfit for public use, the said commissioners shall have power to suspend, for such time as they may deem proper, the license of the proprietor of such carriage, and to recall and take away the Stamp-office plate belonging to the same, and to retain the same during the suspension of such license; and a notice shall be given to the Board of Inland Revenue, according to the form in the Schedule (C.) to this act annexed, in every case by the said commissioners of the suspension of any such license, and of the time for which it is suspended.

3. Every proprietor or driver of a metropolitan stage or hackney carriage who shall use or let to hire, within the limits of this act, any carriage as a metropolitan stage or hackney carriage which has not been certified by the said commissioners of police to be in a fit and proper condition for public use, or who shall use or let to hire, within the limits of this act, any carriage as a metropolitan stage or hackney carriage for which such a certificate had been granted, after notice given to him as hereinbefore required by the said commissioners that such carriage was no longer in a fit and proper condition for public use, shall be liable to a penalty, not exceeding 3*l.*, for each day that he shall so use or let to hire such carriage, or in default of payment may be imprisoned for any time not exceeding one month.

4. The proprietor or driver of any hackney carriage within the limits of this act shall be entitled to demand and take for the hire of such carriage the fares set forth in the Schedule (A.) to this act annexed: provided always, that when the proprietor or driver of any hackney carriage to be paid a fare calculated according to the distance shall be required by the hirer thereof to stop such carriage for fifteen minutes, or for any longer time, it shall be lawful for the proprietor or driver to demand and receive from the hirer so requiring him to stop a further sum (above the fare to which he shall be entitled, calculated according to the distance) of 6d. for every fifteen minutes completed that he shall have been so stopped; and no proprietor or driver shall demand or receive over and above the said fare any sum, for or by way of back fare, for the return of such carriage from the place at which such carriage shall be discharged.

5. The proprietor of every hackney carriage within the limits of this act shall put up, and at all times keep distinctly painted or marked, in such a manner and in such a position as shall be directed by the said commissioners of police, both on the inside and outside of such hackney carriage, the amount of fare according to distance and time which may legally be demanded and taken from the hirer of such carriage; and the driver of every hackney carriage within the limits of this act shall have with him at all times when plying for hire a book or table, in such form as shall be directed by the said commissioners of police, of the fares for the hire of such carriage, which book or table the driver shall produce when required for the information of any person hiring or intending to hire such carriage.

6. In case of disputes as to the fare, to be calculated according to the distance, any table or book signed by the said commissioners of police shall, on proof of such signature, be deemed and taken to be conclusive evidence of all the distances therein stated to have been measured by the authority of the said commissioners of police; and it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to cause to be placed or erected at the several standings for hackney carriages or elsewhere within the metropolitan district, as they may deem convenient, tables of distances and fares, and such other information as may be useful to persons hiring such carriage.

7. The driver of every hackney carriage which shall ply for hire at any place within the limits of this act shall (unless such driver have a reasonable excuse, to be allowed by the justice before whom the matter shall be brought in question) drive such hackney carriage to any place to which he shall be required by the hirer thereof to drive the same, not exceeding six miles from the place where the same shall have been hired, or for any time not exceeding one hour from the time when hired: provided always, that when any hackney carriage shall have been hired by time, the driver thereof may be required to drive at any rate not exceeding four miles within one hour, and if the driver of such carriage shall be required to drive more than four miles within one hour, then in every such case the driver thereof shall be entitled to demand, in addition to the fare regulated by time in Schedule (A.) to this act annexed, for every mile or any part thereof exceeding four miles, the fare regulated by distance as set forth in the same schedule.

8. Every driver of a hackney carriage within the limits of this act shall, on each occasion when such carriage shall be hired, deliver to the hirer thereof a card, on which shall be printed, in legible letters and figures, the words "hackney carriage," and the number of the Stamp-office plate fixed on such hackney carriage, or such other words or figures as the said commissioners of police may direct.

9. The proprietor of every hackney carriage within the limits of this act shall put up, and at all times keep distinctly painted or marked on such carriage, in such a manner and in such a position as shall be directed by the said commissioners of police, the number of persons to be carried thereby as specified in the certificate granted by the said commissioners for such hackney carriage, and the driver of any such hackney carriage shall, if required by the hirer thereof, carry in and by such carriage the number of persons painted or marked thereon, or any less number of persons.

10. The driver of every hackney carriage within the limits of this act shall carry in or upon such carriage a reasonable quantity of luggage for every person hiring such carriage without any additional charge, except as provided in Schedule (A.) to this act annexed.

11. The driver of every hackney carriage within the limits of this act, wherein any property shall be left by any person, shall within twenty-four hours carry such property, if not sooner claimed by the owner thereof, in the state in which he shall find the same, to the nearest police station, and shall there deposit and leave the same with the inspector or other officer on duty, upon pain that every such driver making any default herein shall be liable to a penalty not more than 10*l.*, or at the discretion of the magistrate may be imprisoned for any time not exceeding one month; and the said officer with whom any such property shall be deposited shall forthwith enter in a book to be kept for that purpose the description of such property, and the name and address of the driver who shall bring the same, and the day on which it shall be brought; and the property so entered shall be returned to the person who shall prove to the satisfaction of the commissioners of police that the same belonged to him, such person previously paying all expenses incurred, together with such reasonable sum to the driver who brought the same as the said commissioners shall award: provided always, that if such property shall not be claimed by and proved to belong to some person within one year after the same shall have been deposited, the said commissioners shall cause such property to be sold or otherwise disposed of, and the proceeds thereof to be paid over to the Receiver-General of Inland Revenue, to be carried to the public account, all expenses incurred about such property, together with such reasonable sum to the driver who brought the same as the said commissioners shall award, being first paid thereout; and all property left by any passenger in any metropolitan stage carriage shall be given up to the conductor of such carriage, or, if there be no conductor, to the driver, upon the pain of a penalty of 10*l.*, to be paid by any person refusing or neglecting to give up any such property belonging to another person; and the conductor or driver of every such carriage to whom any such property shall be given up, or who shall himself find it in the carriage, shall within twenty-four hours carry the property, if not sooner claimed by the owner thereof, in the state in which he shall find the same, to the nearest police station, and shall there deposit and leave the same with the inspector or other officer on duty, upon pain that every such driver or conductor making default herein shall be liable to a penalty not more than 10*l.*, or at the discretion of the magistrate may be imprisoned for any time not exceeding one month; and the property so deposited by any conductor or driver shall be dealt with in the same manner as property left in hackney carriages, and deposited by the drivers of such carriages.

12. It shall be lawful for the said commissioners of police from time to time to appoint a sufficient number of fit men to enforce good order at the standings for hackney carriages, and at the places at which metropolitan stage carriages or hackney carriages shall call or ply for passengers, and at such places of public resort within the metropolitan police district as they may deem necessary; and the said commissioners may from time to time make such orders and regulations as they shall deem expedient, subject to the approval of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State given in writing, relative to the duties to be performed by such persons and the places at which each shall act; provided that the said commissioners shall not have authority to appoint any such person to act within or upon the premises belonging to any railway company, unless with the consent of the directors of the company.

13. The said commissioners of police, subject to the approbation of the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, shall appoint wages to be paid to the said persons appointed by them to keep good order at the standings for hackney carriages, and at the places at which metropolitan stage carriages or hackney carriages shall call or ply for passengers, and at such places of public resort as they may deem necessary; and the said commissioners shall also, in such cases as they think fit, direct the water-rates and the expenses of the necessary apparatus for laying on the water at the standings for hackney carriages, and at places where metropolitan stage carriages usually call or ply for hire, to be paid.

14. The proprietor of every metropolitan stage carriage shall cause to be placed inside such carriage a lamp, in such a position and manner as shall be directed by the said commissioners of police; and the conductor, or, if there be no conductor, the driver, of such carriage shall keep the said lamp properly lighted whenever such carriage shall be used to ply for hire or carry passengers at any time after sunset and before sunrise.

15. It shall not be lawful for the proprietor of any metropolitan stage or hackney carriage to suffer any notice, advertisement, or printed bill, or any names, letters, or number, to appear upon the outside of any such carriage in such a manner as to obstruct the light or ventilation of such carriage, or on the inside of any such carriage in such position that any such notice, advertisement, or printed bill shall obstruct the light or ventilation of such carriage, or cause annoyance to any passenger therein.

16. It shall not be lawful for any person to carry about on any carriage, or on horseback, or on foot, in any thoroughfare or public place within the limits of this act, to the obstruction or annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers, any picture, placard, notice, or advertisement, whether written, printed, or painted upon or posted or attached to any part of such carriage, or on any board, or otherwise.

17. The driver or conductor of any metropolitan stage carriage, or the driver of any hackney carriage, who shall respectively commit any of the following offences within the limits of this act, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s. for each offence, or, in default of payment, to imprisonment for any time not exceeding one calendar month.

1. Every driver of a hackney carriage who shall demand or take more than the proper fare as set forth in Schedule (A.) to this act annexed, or who shall refuse to admit and carry in his carriage the number of persons painted or marked on such carriage, or specified in the certificate granted by the said commissioners of police in respect of such carriage, or who shall refuse to carry by his carriage a reasonable quantity of luggage for any person hiring or intending to hire such carriage.

2. Every driver of a hackney carriage who shall refuse to drive such carriage to any place within the limits of this act, not exceeding six miles, to which he shall be required to drive any person hiring or intending to hire such carriage, or who shall refuse to drive any such carriage for any time not exceeding one hour, if so required by any person hiring or intending to hire such carriage, or who shall not drive the same at a reasonable and proper speed, not less than six miles an hour, except in cases of unavoidable delay, or when required by the hirer thereof to drive at any slower pace.

3. Every driver of a hackney carriage who shall ply for hire with any carriage or horse which shall be at the time unfit for public use, or who shall refuse or neglect to deliver to the hirer of his carriage a ticket with the number of the Stamp-office plate on such carriage printed thereon.

18. It shall be lawful for any one of the police magistrates at any of the metropolitan police courts to hear and determine all offences against the provisions of this act, and also all disputes or causes of complaint that may arise out of the same; or if the offence, dispute, or cause of complaint shall be committed or occur in any place not comprised within the limits of a police court district, the same may be heard and determined by two justices of the peace for the county; or if the offence, dispute, or cause of complaint shall be committed or occur within the city of London, the same shall be heard and determined by one justice of the peace for the said city, or by a metropolitan police magistrate sitting at the police court in Bow-street; and in case of any dispute between the hirer and driver of any hackney carriage, the hirer may require the driver forthwith to drive to the nearest metropolitan police court or justice room, where complaint may be made to the magistrate then sitting, who shall hear and determine the same, without requiring any summons to be issued for that purpose; and if such dispute should arise at a time when the police court or justice room shall not be open, the hirer may require the driver to drive to the nearest police station or justice room, where the complaint shall be entered, and notice given to both parties that the matter in dispute shall be heard by the magistrate at his next sitting.

19. For every offence against the provisions of this act for which no special penalty is hereinbefore appointed, the offender shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s., or in default of payment be imprisoned for any time not exceeding one month in any gaol or house of correction within the jurisdiction of the magistrate before whom the conviction shall take place.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 3, 1853.

THE act of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, for amending the law of patents, makes some very useful alterations in the practice in granting letters-patent. But there are still defects which it has neglected to cure, and under it some difficulties have arisen, which did not exist under the old practice. Of the latter class is that introduced by the effect of the 3rd and 15th sections, the latter of which enacts that the Attorney or Solicitor General may, after hearing any opposition to the grant of a patent, "cause a warrant to be made for the sealing of letters-patent for the said invention, and such warrant shall be sealed with the seal of the Commissioners, and shall set forth the tenor and effect of the letters-patent thereby authorised to be granted, and such law officer shall direct the insertion in such letters-patent of all such restrictions, conditions, and provisos as he may deem usual and expedient in such grants, or necessary in pursuance of the provisions of this act; and the said warrant shall be the warrant for the making and sealing of letters-patent under this act according to the tenor of the said warrant: provided always, that the

VOL. XVII.

H H

Lord Chancellor shall and may have and exercise such powers, authority, and discretion in respect to the said warrant, and the letters-patent therein directed to be made under this act, as he now has and might now exercise with respect to the warrant for the issue under the Great Seal of letters-patent for any invention, and with respect to the making and issuing of such letters-patent; and the writ of scire facias shall lie for the repeal of any letters-patent issued under this act, in the like cases as the same would lie for the repeal of letters-patent which may now be issued under the Great Seal."

Now, when an inventor has, under the 8th section, deposited a provisional specification, he obtains provisional protection for six months only, and he is afterwards obliged to put in a complete specification within the time fixed by the patent, under the 15th section. The 15th section, keeping alive the power of the Lord Chancellor to grant or withhold a patent, notwithstanding the warrant of the law officer, it follows that in practice the grant of a patent may be opposed before the Lord Chancellor, or, as it is termed, at the Great Seal, after the warrant has issued fixing the time within which the specification must be inrolled, and consequently the ultimate grant of the patent may be delayed till that period has nearly or even wholly elapsed; and then comes the question, whether there is anywhere any power to enlarge the time. It is true, a case has occurred in which, in such a state of things, the Lord Chancellor did order the time for inrolling the specification to be enlarged beyond the period named in the warrant. But the case was not argued, and can hardly be considered as of authority. The reasons against the existence of any such jurisdiction are these:—The 15th section reserves to the Lord Chancellor, with respect to the law officer's warrant, the power which he had formerly, with respect to the warrant for the issue under the Great Seal of letters-patent. Now, under the old practice, the power which he had in respect of such warrant was to grant or withhold it—he might withhold it, notwithstanding the Queen's warrant, and bill, for the patent to pass, had been issued. But both those documents contained the terms (among others, as to the time for filing a specification) on which the Crown would permit the grant; and there is nothing to shew that the Lord Chancellor had any power to alter those conditions; and certainly there is no reported case in which the Lord Chancellor ever did at the Great Seal do more than refuse simply to let the patent pass. The principle on which he exercised this jurisdiction was, the preventing the Crown from being drawn into making an improper grant. But that principle does not at all bear upon the question of altering the conditions on which the Crown has thought fit to make a proper grant.

Under the old practice, however, no substantial difficulty could occur, because the time fixed for filing the specification was always from the date of the patent. But now that it is, under the rules issued by the Commissioners, from the date of the deposit of the petition, it may, as we have observed, be wholly consumed before the patent is issued; and it is open to very grave doubt whether, if even it could be referred back to the law officer to reconsider his warrant, he could introduce into it any conditions not warranted by the rules laid down by the Commissioners.

Among the defects of omission of the new act, is the omission to give power to the law officer, on opposition, to examine the parties and witnesses viva voce. The law officer is called upon, not unfrequently, to decide between conflicting claims to a patent, upon evidence so unsatisfactory, being exclusively by affidavit, that it is scarcely possible for him to satisfy his mind with whom the truth lies; and he must then either withhold or grant a patent, at the risk of irremediable injury to one of the parties, or leave them to a subsequent contest at law. These defects might and ought to be remedied.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor will not appoint any commissioners to administer oaths under the act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 78, until after the commencement of next term, when regulations for the same will be made.

Most Gracious Sovereign,

We, your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled, towards raising the necessary supplies for defraying your Majesty's public expenses, and making a permanent addition to the public revenue, have freely and voluntarily resolved to grant unto your Majesty the duties hereinafter mentioned; and do most humbly beseech your Majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted &c. as follows:—

- Sect. 1. In the construction and for the purposes of this act, The term "real property" shall include all freehold, copyhold, customary, leasehold, and other hereditaments, and heritable property, whether corporeal or incorporeal, in Great Britain and Ireland, except money secured on heritable property in Scotland, and all estates in any such hereditaments.
- The term "personal property" shall not include leaseholds, but shall include money payable under any engagement, and money secured on heritable property in Scotland, and all other property not comprised in the preceding definition of real property.
- The term "property" alone shall include real property and personal property.
- The term "succession" shall denote any property chargeable with duty under this act.
- The term "trustee" shall include an executor and administrator, and any person having or taking on himself the administration of property affected by any express or implied trust.
- The term "person" shall include a body corporate, company, and society.
- The term "Legacy Duty Acts" shall denote the acts now in force for charging duties on legacies and shares of the personal estates of deceased persons.
2. Every past or future disposition of property, by reason whereof any person has or shall become beneficially entitled to any property, or the income thereof, upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, either immediately or after any interval, either certainly or contingently, and either originally or by way of substitutive limitation, and every devolution by law of any beneficial interest in property, or the income thereof, upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, to any other person, in possession or expectancy, shall be deemed to have conferred or to confer, on the person entitled by reason of any such disposition or devolution, a "succession;" and the term "successor" shall denote the person so entitled; and the term "predecessor" shall denote the settlor, disponent, testator, obligor, ancestor, or other person from whom the interest of the successor is or shall be derived.

3. Where any persons shall, at or after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, have any property vested in them jointly, by any title not conferring on them a succession, any beneficial interest in such property accruing to any of them by survivorship shall be deemed to be a succession; and every person to whom any such interest shall accrue shall be deemed to be the successor; and the person upon whose death such accruer shall take place shall be deemed to be the predecessor; and where any persons after the time appointed for the commencement of this act shall take any succession jointly, they shall pay the duty, if any, chargeable thereon by this act in proportion to their respective interests in the succession; and any beneficial interest in such succession accruing to any of them by survivorship shall be deemed to be a new succession derived from the predecessor from whom the joint title shall have been derived.

4. Where any person shall have a general power of appointment, under any disposition of property taking effect upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, over property, he shall, in the event of his making any appointment thereunder, be deemed to be entitled, at the time of his exercising such power, to the property or interest thereby appointed as a succession derived from the donor of the power; and where any person shall have a limited power of appointment, under a disposition taking effect upon any such death, over property, any person taking any property by the exercise of such power shall be deemed to take the same as a succession derived from the person creating the power as predecessor.

5. Where any property shall, at or after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, be subject to any charge, estate, or interest, determinable by the death of any person, or at any period ascertainable only by reference to death, the increase of benefit accruing to any person or persons upon the extinction or determination of such charge, estate, or interest, shall be deemed to be a succession accruing to the person, or the persons if more than one, then entitled beneficially to the property, or the income thereof, according to his or their respective estates or interests therein, or beneficial enjoyment thereof; and the person or persons from whom such successor or successors respectively shall have derived title to the property so charged shall be deemed to be the predecessor or predecessors, as the case may be.

6. Provided that no person entitled, at the time appointed for the commencement of this act, to the immediate reversion in any real property expectant upon the determination of any lease for life, or for years determinable on life, shall be chargeable with duty in respect of such determination, in the event of the same occurring in his lifetime.

7. Where any disposition of property, not being a bonâ fide sale, and not conferring an interest expectant on death on the person in whose favour the same shall be made, shall be accompanied by the reservation or assurance of or contract for any benefit to the grantor, or any other person, for any term of life, or for any period ascertainable only by reference to death, such disposition shall be deemed to confer, at the time appointed for the determination of such benefit, an increase of beneficial interest in such property, as a succession equal in annual value to the yearly amount or yearly value of the benefit so reserved, assured, or contracted for, on the person in whose favour such disposition shall be made.

8. Where any disposition of property shall be made to take effect at a period ascertainable only by reference to the date of the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, such disposition shall be deemed to confer a succession on the person in whose favour the same shall be made; and where any disposition of property shall purport to take effect presently, or under such circumstances as not to confer a succession, but by the effect or in consequence of any engagement, secret trust, or arrangement, capable of being enforced in a court of law or equity, the beneficial ownership of such property shall not bonâ fide pass according to such disposition, but shall in fact devolve to any person on death, or at some period ascertainable only by reference to death, then such last-mentioned person shall be deemed to acquire the property so passing as a succession derived from the person making the disposition as the predecessor; and where any court of competent jurisdiction shall declare any disposition to have been fraudulent, and made for the purpose of evading the duty imposed by this act, it shall be lawful for such court to declare a succession to have been conferred on such person at such time and to such an extent as such court shall think just; and such last-mentioned person shall be deemed to have taken a succession accordingly derived from the person making such disposition as predecessor.

9. The duties hereinafter imposed shall be considered as stamp duties, and shall be under the care and management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, hereinafter called "the commissioners," who, by themselves and their officers, shall have the same powers and authorities for the collection, recovery, and management thereof as are by an act passed in the session holden in the 12 & 13 Vict., [c. 1], or by any other act or acts, vested in them for the collection, recovery, and management of any stamp duties; and shall provide proper stamps for denoting the rate per centum of the duties payable under this act; and shall have all other powers and authorities requisite for carrying this act into execution.

10. There shall be levied and paid to her Majesty in respect of every such succession as aforesaid, according to the value thereof, the following duties, (that is to say),

Where the successor shall be the lineal issue or lineal ancestor of the predecessor, a duty at the rate of 11. per centum upon such value:

Where the successor shall be a brother or sister, or a descendant of a brother or sister of the predecessor, a duty at the rate of 31. per centum upon such value:

Where the successor shall be a brother or sister of the father or mother, or a descendant of a brother or sister of the father or mother of the predecessor, a duty at the rate of 51. per centum upon such value:

Where the successor shall be a brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother, or a descendant of the brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother of the predecessor, a duty at the rate of 61. per centum upon such value:

Where the successor shall be in any other degree of collateral consanguinity to the predecessor than is hereinbefore described, or shall be a stranger in blood to him, a duty at the rate of 101. per centum upon such value.

11. Where any person chargeable with duty under this act in respect of any succession, or chargeable with duty under the Legacy Duty Acts in respect of any legacy bequeathed to him or her by a testator dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, or in respect of the personal estate of any person dying after the same period, shall have been married to any wife or husband of nearer consanguinity than himself or herself to the predecessor, testator, or deceased person, then the person taking such succession, legacy, or personal estate shall pay in respect thereof the same rate of duty only as such his or her wife or husband would have been chargeable with if she or he had taken the same.

12. Where any person shall take a succession under a disposition made by himself, then, if at the date of such disposition he shall have been entitled to the property comprised in the succession expectantly on the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, and such person shall have died during the continuance of such disposition, he shall be chargeable with duty on his succession at the same rate as he would have been chargeable with if no such disposition had been made; but a successor shall not in any other case be chargeable with duty upon a succession taken under a disposition made by himself, and no person shall be chargeable with duty upon the extinction or determination of any charge, estate, or interest created by himself, unless at the date of the creation thereof he shall have been entitled to the property subjected thereto expectantly on the death of some person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this act.

13. Where the successor shall derive his succession from more predecessors than one, and the proportional interest derived from each of them shall not be distinguishable, it shall be lawful for the commissioners to agree with the successor as to the duty payable; but if no such agreement shall be made, the successor shall be deemed to have derived his succession in equal proportions from each predecessor, and shall be chargeable with duty accordingly.

14. Where the interest of any successor in any personal property shall, before he shall have become entitled thereto in possession, have passed by reason of death to any other successor or successors, then one duty only shall be paid in respect of such interest, and shall be due from the successor who shall first become entitled thereto in possession; but such duty shall be at the highest rate which, if every such successor had been subject to duty, would have been payable by any one of them.

15. Where, at the time appointed for the commencement of this act, any reversionary property expectant on death shall be vested, by alienation or other derivative title, in any person other than the person who shall have been originally entitled thereto under any such disposition or devolution as is mentioned in the 2nd section of this act, then the person in whom such property shall be so vested shall be chargeable with duty in respect thereof as a succession at the same time and at the same rate as the person so originally entitled would have been chargeable with if no such alienation had been made or derivative title created; and where, after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, any succession shall, before the successor shall have become entitled thereto or to the income thereof in possession, have become vested by alienation or by any title not conferring a new succession in any other person, then the duty payable in respect thereof shall be paid at the same rate and time as the same would have been payable if no such alienation had been made or derivative title created; and where the title to any succession shall be accelerated by the surrender or extinction of any prior interests, then the duty thereon shall be payable at the same time and in the same manner as such duty would have been payable if no such acceleration had taken place.

16. Where property shall become subject to a trust for any charitable or public purposes, under any past or future disposition, which, if made in favour of an individual, would confer on him a succession, there shall be payable in respect of such property, upon its becoming subject to such trusts, a duty at the rate of 10*l.* per centum upon the amount or principal value of such property; and it shall be lawful for the trustee of any such property to raise the amount of any duty due in respect thereof, with all reasonable expenses, upon the security of the charity property, at interest, with power for him to give effectual discharges for the money so raised.

17. No policy of insurance on the life of any person shall create the relation of predecessor and successor between the insurers and the assured, or between the insurers and any assignee of the assured, and no bond or contract made by any person bonâ fide for valuable consideration in money or money's worth, for the payment of money or money's worth after the death of any other person, shall create the relation of predecessor and successor between the person making such bond or contract and the person to or with whom the same shall be made; but any disposition or devolution of the monies payable under such policy, bond, or contract, if otherwise such as in itself to create a succession within the provisions of this act, shall be deemed to confer a succession.

18. Where the whole succession or successions derived from the same predecessor and passing upon any death to any person or persons shall not amount in money or principal value to the sum of 100*l.*, no duty shall be payable under this act in respect thereof, or of any portion thereof; and no duty shall be payable under this act upon any succession which, as estimated according to the provisions of this act, shall be of less value than 20*l.* in the whole, or upon any monies applied to the payment of the duty on any succession according to any trust for that purpose, or by any person in respect of a succession, who, if the same were a legacy bequeathed to him by the predecessor, would be exempted from the payment of duty in respect thereof under the Legacy Duty Acts; and no person shall be charged with duty under this act in respect of any interest surrendered by him or extinguished before the time appointed for the commencement of this act; and no person charged with the duties on legacies and shares of personal estate under the Legacy Duty Acts, in respect of any property subject to such duties, shall be charged also with the duty granted by this act in respect of the same acquisition of the same property.

19. No legatee or other person shall, after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, be chargeable under the Legacy Duty Acts with duty, not then already due, in respect of any leasehold hereditaments of any testator or deceased person, as belonging to the personal estate of the testator or deceased.

20. The duty imposed by this act shall be paid at the time when the successor, or any person in his right or on his behalf, shall become entitled in possession to his succession, or to the receipt of the income and profits thereof; except that if there shall be any prior charge, estate, or interest, not created by the successor himself, upon or in the succession, by reason whereof the successor shall not be presently entitled to the full enjoyment or value thereof, the duty in respect of the increased value accruing upon the determination of such charge, estate, or interest, shall, if not previously paid, compounded for, or commuted, be paid at the time of such determination; and except that in case of an annuity, or property hereby made chargeable as an annuity, the duties shall be paid by such instalments as are hereinafter directed or referred to; provided that no duty shall be payable upon the determination of any lease purporting at the date thereof to be a lease at rack-rent, in respect of the increase accruing to the successor upon such determination.

21. The interest of every successor, except as herein provided, in real property, shall be considered to be of the value of an annuity equal to the annual value of such property, after making such allowances as are hereinafter directed, and payable from the date of his becoming entitled thereto in possession, or to the receipt of the income or profits thereof during the residue of his life, or for any less period during which he shall be entitled thereto; and every such annuity, for the purposes of this act, shall be valued according to the tables in the schedule annexed to this act; and the duty chargeable thereon shall be paid by eight equal half-yearly instalments, the first of such instalments to be paid at the expiration of twelve months next after the successor shall have become entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the real property in respect whereof the same shall be payable, and the seven following instalments at half-yearly intervals of six months each, to be computed from the day on which the first instalment shall have become due; provided that if the successor shall die before all such instalments shall have become due, then any instalments not due at his decease shall cease to be payable, except in the case of a successor who shall have been competent to dispose by will of a continuing interest in such property, in which case the instalments unpaid at his death shall be a continuing charge on such interest, in exoneration of his other property, and shall be payable by the owner for the time being of such interest.

22. In estimating the annual value of lands used for agricultural purposes, houses, buildings, tithes, teinds, rent-charges, and other property yielding or capable of yielding income not of a fluctuating character, an allowance shall be made of all necessary outgoings.

23. Where timber, trees, or wood, not being coppice of underwood, shall be comprised in any succession, the successor shall be chargeable with duty upon his interest in the net monies, after deducting all necessary outgoings for the year, which shall from time to time be received from any sales of such timber, trees, or wood, and shall account for and pay the same yearly; provided that no duty shall be payable on the net monies received from the sale of timber, trees, or wood in any one year unless such net monies shall exceed the sum of 10*l.*; provided that if the successor shall be desirous of commuting the duty, and shall deliver to the commissioners an estimate of the net monies obtainable by him from the sale of such timber, trees, and wood as may, in a prudent course of management of the property, be felled by such successor during his life, the commissioners, if satisfied with such estimate, shall accept the same, and assess the duty accordingly.

24. A successor shall not be chargeable with duty in respect of any advowson or church patronage comprised in his succession, unless the same, or some right of presentation, or some other interest in or out of such advowson or church patronage, shall be disposed of by or in concert with him for money or money's worth, in which case he shall be chargeable with duty upon the amount or value of the money or money's worth for which the same, or any such presentation or interest, shall be so disposed of at the time of such disposal.

25. Where a successor, entitled to any real property subject to any lease by reason whereof he shall not be presently entitled to the full enjoyment thereof, shall not have paid duty in respect of the full yearly value of such property, he shall be chargeable with duty upon his interest in any fine or grassum or other consideration which may be received during his life for the renewal of any such lease, or the grant of any reversionary lease of the same property.

26. The yearly value of any manor, opened mine, or other real property of a fluctuating yearly income, shall either be calculated upon the average profits or income derived therefrom, after deducting all necessary outgoings, during such a number of preceding years as shall be agreed upon for this purpose between the commissioners and the successor, before the first payment of duty on the succession shall have become due; or if no such period shall be agreed upon, then the principal value of such property shall be ascertained, and the annual value thereof shall be considered to be equal to interest calculated at the rate of 34. per cent. per annum on the amount of such principal value.

27. Where any body corporate, company, or society shall become entitled, as successors, to any real property, the duty in respect thereof shall be assessed upon the principal value of such property, but shall be payable by such instalments, at such times, and in such manner as the same would be payable if assessed in respect of property devolving on a successor in fee-simple; and it shall be lawful for such body corporate, company, or society, or any trustee thereof, to raise the amount of any duty due in respect of their succession upon the security thereof, at interest, with power for them to give effectual discharges for the money so raised.

28. If a successor, or any person on his behalf, upon becoming entitled to any copyhold or other real property, shall be subject to any fines, casualties of superiority, compositions, reliefs, or charges incident to the tenure thereof, and due in respect of his succession, he shall be entitled to have a deduction allowed to him of the amount of such fines, casualties, compositions, reliefs, or charges from the assessable value of his interest in such copyhold or other real property.

29. The interest of any successor in monies to arise from the sale of real property under any trust for the sale thereof, so far as the same shall not be chargeable with duty under the Legacy Duty Acts, shall be deemed to be personal property chargeable with duty under this act; provided that where such monies shall be subject to any trust for the re-investment thereof in the purchase of other real property, to which the successor would not be absolutely entitled, such monies shall be deemed to be real property, and for the purpose of this act each successor's interest therein shall be considered to be of the value of an annuity, payable during his life, or for any less period during which he shall be entitled, equal in amount to the annual produce of the actual trust property at the time of his becoming entitled in possession, whether the same shall then be the real property subject to the trust or direction for sale, or any property purchased in substitution for it, or any intermediate investment of the produce of the sale of the original property.

30. The interest of any successor in personal property subject to any trust for the investment thereof in the purchase of real property to which the successor would be absolutely entitled shall, so far as the same shall not be chargeable with duty under the Legacy Duty Acts, be chargeable with duty under this act as personal property; and personal property subject to any trust for the investment thereof in the purchase of real property to which the successor would not be absolutely entitled shall, so far as the same shall not be chargeable with duty under the Legacy Duty Acts, be chargeable with duty under this act as real property; and for the purposes of this act each successor's interest therein shall be considered to be of the value of an annuity, payable during his life, or for any less period during which he shall be entitled, equal in amount to the annual produce of the actual trust property at the time of his becoming entitled in possession, whether the same shall be the real property directed to be purchased, or any intermediate investment of the personal property directed to be invested in such purchase.

31. Where it shall be required to calculate, for the purposes either of this act or of the Legacy Duty Acts, the value of any annuity, or of any interest chargeable with duty as an annuity, such value shall, after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, be calculated according to the tables in the schedule annexed to this act, and not according to the tables in the schedule annexed to the act of the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, and such annuity or interest shall be chargeable with duty accordingly.

32. The following provisions relating to the assessment and payment of duty on personal estate, and the exemption thereof from duty in certain cases, namely, the 8th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 14th, and 23rd sections of the said act of the 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, shall be applicable to the personal property comprised in any succession, and to the assessment and payment of duty thereon, as if such personal property were a legacy bequeathed by the predecessor to the successor, and were subject to the said provisions, and as if the tables in the said act referred to were the tables in the schedules annexed to this act.

33. Where the donee of a general power of appointment shall become chargeable with duty in respect of the property appointed by him under such power, he shall be allowed to deduct from the duty so payable any duty he may have already paid in respect of any limited interest taken by him in such property.

34. In estimating the value of a succession, no allowance shall be made in respect of any incumbrance thereon created or incurred by the successor, not made in execution of a prior special power of appointment, but an allowance shall be made in respect of all other incumbrances, and also in respect of any monies which the successor may previously to his possession have laid out in the substantial repairs or permanent improvement of real property comprised in his succession; provided that upon any successor becoming entitled to real property subject to any prior principal charge, an allowance shall be made to him in respect only of the yearly sums payable by way of interest or otherwise on such charge as reducing the annual value pro tanto of such real property.

35. In estimating the value of a succession, no allowance shall be made in respect of any contingent incumbrance thereon; but in the event of such incumbrance taking effect as an actual burthen on the interest of the successor, he shall be entitled to a return of a proportionate amount of the duty so paid by him in respect of the amount or value of the incumbrance when taking effect.

36. In estimating the value of a succession, no allowance shall be made in respect of any contingency upon the happening of which the property may pass to some other person; but in the event of the same so passing, the successor shall be entitled to a return of so much of the duty paid by him as will reduce the same to the amount which would have been payable by him if such duty had been assessed in respect of the actual duration or extent of his interest.

37. Where a successor shall not have obtained the whole of his succession at the time of the duty becoming payable, he shall be chargeable only with duty on the value of the property or benefit from time to time obtained by him; and whenever any duty shall have been paid on account of any succession, and it shall afterwards be proved to the satisfaction of the commissioners that such duty, not being due from the person paying the same, was paid by mistake, or was paid in respect of property which the successor shall have been unable to recover, or from or of which he shall have been evicted or deprived by any superior title, or that for any other reason it ought to be refunded, the commissioners shall thereupon refund the same to the person entitled thereto.

38. Where any successor upon taking a succession shall be bound to relinquish or be deprived of any other property, the commissioners shall, upon the computation of the assessable value of his succession, make such allowance to him as may be just in respect of the value of such property.

39. Where, in the opinion of the commissioners, any succession shall be of such a nature, or so disposed or circumstanced, that the value thereof shall not be fairly ascertainable under any of the preceding directions, or where, from the complication of circumstances affecting the value of a succession, or affecting the assessment or recovery of the duty thereon, the commissioners shall think it expedient to exercise this present authority, it shall be lawful for them to compound the duty payable on the succession upon such terms as they shall think fit, and to give discharges to the successor, upon payment of duty according to such composition; and it shall be lawful for them, in any special cases in which they may think it expedient so to do, to enlarge the time for payment of any duty.

40. It shall be lawful for the commissioners to receive any duty tendered to them in advance, and to allow discount thereon at the rate of 4l. per centum per annum, or at such other rate as may from time to time be directed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury; and no person, by reason of his having made any payment of duty in advance, shall be prejudiced in his right to have any repayment of duty made to him to which he may become entitled under any of the provisions of this act.

41. It shall be lawful for the commissioners, in their discretion, upon application made by any person who shall be entitled to a succession in expectancy, to commute the duty presumptively payable in respect of such succession for a certain sum to be presently paid, and for assessing the amount which shall be so payable they shall cause the present value to be set upon such presumptive duty, regard being had to the contingencies affecting the liability to such duty, and the interest of money involved in such calculation being reckoned at the rate for the time being allowed by the commissioners in respect of duties paid in advance; and upon the receipt of such certain sum they shall give discharges to the successor accordingly.

42. The duty imposed by this act shall be a first charge on the interest of the successor, and of all persons claiming in his right, in all the real property in respect whereof such duty shall be assessed; and such duty shall also be a first charge on the interest of the successor in the personal property in respect whereof the same shall be assessed, while the same shall remain in the ownership or control of the successor, or of any trustee for him, or of his guardian or committee, or tutor or curator, or of the husband of any wife who shall be the successor; and the said duty shall be a debt due to the Crown from the successor, having, in the case of real property comprised in any succession, priority over all charges and interests created by him, but such duty shall not charge or affect any other real property of the successor than the property comprised in such succession; provided that where any settled real property comprised in a succession shall be subject to any power of sale, exchange, or partition, exercisable with the consent of the successor, or by the successor with the consent of another person, he shall not be disqualified by the charge of duty on his succession from effectually authorising by his consent the exercise of such power, or exercising any power with proper consent, as the case may be, and in such case the duty shall be charged substitutively upon the successor's interest in all real property acquired in substitution for the real property before comprised in the succession, and in the meantime upon his interest also in all monies arising from the exercise of any such power, and in all investments of such monies.

43. The commissioners shall, at the request of any successor, or any person claiming in his right, acceptor cause to be made so many separate assessments of the duty payable in respect of the interest of the successor in any separate properties, or in defined portions of the same property, as shall be reasonably required; and in such cases the respective properties shall be chargeable only with the amount of duty separately assessed in respect thereof; and it shall be lawful also for the commissioners, by their certificates, to be issued in such form as they shall think fit, from time to time to declare that any duties already assessed, whether collectively or distributively, in respect of any succession, shall thenceforth be charged, as to any unpaid instalments, according to any further distribution thereof, upon separate parts only of the property in respect of which such assessment shall have been made, in which case the charge of such duties shall be thenceforth limited according to such further distribution.

44. The following persons, besides the successor, shall be personally accountable to her Majesty for the duty payable in respect of any succession, but to the extent only of the property or funds actually received or disposed of by them respectively after the time appointed for the commencement of this act; that is to say, every trustee, guardian, committee, tutor, or curator, or husband, in whom respectively any property, or the management of any property, subject to such duty, shall be vested, and every person in whom the same shall be vested by alienation or other derivative title at the time of the succession becoming an interest in possession; and all such trustees, guardians, committees, tutors, curators, husbands, and persons shall be authorised to compound or pay in advance or commute any duty, and retain out of the property subject to any such duty the amount thereof, or to raise such amount, and the expenses incident thereto, at interest on the security of such property, with power to give effectual discharges for the same, and such security shall have priority over any charge or incumbrance created by the successor; and in the event of the non-payment of such duty as aforesaid every person hereby made accountable shall be a debtor to her Majesty in the amount of the unpaid duty for which he shall be so accountable.

45. The persons hereby made accountable for the payment of duty in respect of any succession, or some of them, shall, in the case of personal property, at the time of the first payment, delivery, retainer, satisfaction, or other discharge of the same, or any part thereof, to or for the successor or any person in his right, and in the case of real property when any duty in respect thereof shall first become payable, give notice to the commissioners or to their officers of their liability to such duty, and shall at the same time deliver to the commissioners or to their officers a full and true account of the property for the duty whereon they shall respectively be accountable, and of the value thereof, and of the deductions claimed by them, together with the names of the successor and predecessor, and their relation to each other, and all such other particulars as shall be necessary or proper for enabling the commissioners fully and correctly to ascertain the duties due; and the commissioners, if satisfied with such account and estimate as originally delivered, or with any amendments that may be made therein upon their requisition, may assess the succession duty on the footing of such account and estimate; but it shall be lawful for the commissioners, if dissatisfied with such account and estimate, to cause an account and estimate to be taken by any person or persons to be appointed by themselves for that purpose, and to assess the duty on the footing of such last-mentioned account and estimate, subject to appeal, as hereinafter provided; and if the duty so assessed shall exceed the duty assessable according to the return made to the commissioners, and with which they shall have been dissatisfied, and if there shall be no appeal against such assessment, then it shall be in the discretion of the commissioners, having regard to the merits of each case, to charge the whole or any part of the expenses incident to the taking of such last-mentioned account and estimate on the interest of the successor in respect whereof the duty shall be due, in increase of such duty, and to recover the same forthwith accordingly; and if there shall be an appeal against such last-mentioned assessment, then the payment of such expenses shall be in the discretion of the court of appeal hereinafter appointed.

46. If any person required to give any such notice or deliver such account as aforesaid shall wilfully neglect to do so at the prescribed period, he shall be liable to pay to her Majesty a sum equal to 10l. per centum upon the amount of duty payable by him, or in the case of a succession chargeable with a higher rate of duty than 1l. per centum upon the value thereof, upon such less sum as such duty, if assessable at the rate of 1l. per centum upon the value of the succession, would amount to, and a like penalty for every month after the first month during which such neglect shall continue; and if any person liable under this act to pay any duty shall, after such duty shall have been finally ascertained, wilfully neglect to do so within twenty-one days, he shall also be liable to pay to her Majesty a sum equal to 10l. per centum upon the amount of duty so unpaid, or upon such less sum as such duty, if assessable at the rate of 1l. per centum on the value of the succession, would amount to, and a like penalty for every month after the first month during which such neglect shall continue.

47. If any accountable party required by the commissioners to deliver any such account as aforesaid shall make default in doing so, it shall be lawful for the commissioners to sue out of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in England, Scotland, or Ireland, as they shall think expedient, according to the circumstances of the case, and for such Court to issue, a writ of summons in such form as the judges of such court shall from time to time frame, commanding the party so in default to deliver such account within such period as may be appointed in the writ, or to shew cause to the contrary, and on cause being shewn such order shall be made as shall be just.

48. The commissioners shall, for the purposes of the Legacy Duty Acts, be empowered to require and enforce the delivery of accounts from executors, administrators, and trustees of property and legatees chargeable with duty under such acts, and for the duty whereon they shall be accountable, in the same manner as they are by the last preceding section of this act empowered to require and enforce the delivery of accounts for the purposes of this act.

49. Every person who under the provisions of this act may deliver any account or estimate of the property comprised in any succession shall, if required by the commissioners, produce before them such books and documents in the custody or control of such person, so far as the same relate to such account or estimate, as may be capable of affording any necessary information for the purpose of ascertaining such property and the duty payable thereon; and the commissioners may, without payment of any fee, inspect and take copies of any public book; but all such information shall be deemed to be confidential, and the commissioners shall not disclose the same, or the contents of any document or book, to any person, otherwise than for the purposes of this act.

50. It shall be lawful for any accountable party dissatisfied with the assessment of the commissioners, upon giving, within twenty-one days after the date of such assessment, notice in writing to the commissioners of his intention to appeal against such assessment, and a statement of the grounds of such appeal, such statement to be furnished within the further period of thirty days, to appeal by petition accordingly to her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in England, Scotland, or Ireland, according to the place in which the appellant shall be resident; and every such court, or any judge thereof sitting in chambers, shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter of such appeal and the costs thereof, with power to direct, for the purposes of such appeal, any inquiry, valuation, or report to be made by any officer of the court, or other person, as such court or judge may think fit; provided that where the sum in dispute in respect of duty on such assessment does not exceed 50*l.*, the accountable party may, having given notice of appeal and delivered a statement of the grounds thereof as hereinbefore directed, appeal to the judge of the county court in England, the sheriff court in Scotland, or the assistant barrister's court in Ireland, for the district, county, or division in which the appellant shall be resident or the property be situate, and every such judge shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter of such last-mentioned appeal, with the like power and authority as are by this section given to a judge of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer.

51. Whenever any payment of duty shall be made under this act, the same shall be entered in a book to be kept by the commissioners for this purpose, and the Receiver-General of Inland Revenue, or other proper officer appointed by the commissioners, shall give a receipt for the same in such form as they shall think fit, and stamped with the proper stamp for denoting the rate of duty; and the commissioners shall from time to time deliver to any person interested in any property affected by such duty, on applying for the same for any reasonable purpose approved by the commissioners, a certificate, in such form as they may think fit, of such payment.

52. Every receipt and certificate purporting to be in discharge of the whole duty payable for the time being in respect of any succession, or any part thereof, shall exonerate a bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration, and without notice, from such duty, notwithstanding any suppression or misstatement in the account upon the footing whereof the same may have been assessed, or any insufficiency of such assessment; and no bonâ fide purchaser of property for valuable consideration under a title not appearing to confer a succession shall be subject to any duty with which such property may be chargeable under the provisions of this act, by reason of any extrinsic circumstances of which he shall not have had notice at the time of such purchase.

53. Whenever any suit shall be pending in any court for the administration of any property chargeable with duty under this act or the Legacy Duty Acts, such court shall provide, out of any property which may be in the possession or control of the court, for the payment of duty to the commissioners.

54. This act shall be taken to have come into operation on the 19th May, 1853, and shall take effect accordingly.

55. This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Succession Duty Act, 1853."

EASTERN UNION RAILWAY BILL. TO ALL THE PREFERENCE SHAREHOLDERS OF THE EASTERN UNION RAILWAY COMPANY.

I beg to inform you that this repudiating Bill has passed, notwithstanding my strenuous opposition to its unrighteous principle. The means by which it has been passed I shall take an opportunity of making very publicly known, and I trust my so doing may lead to these important and sacred questions of property being dealt with before more competent tribunals than the present parliamentary ones.

The Bill, as introduced by the Company, proposed compulsorily to pay off every class of Preference Shareholders at par, without the payment of any bonus, and without the payment of the arrears of dividend or interest due to you.

The immediate object of the present advertisement is to inform you, that, under the Act as it has been passed, you are entitled not only to 1091. for every 1000. of principal money, and so in proportion, but also to all your arrears of interest or dividends up to the time at which this Company may pay you the 1091. per cent. Do not be deluded by any statement that may be made to you as to there being doubt about your being legally entitled to all arrears of interest or dividends over and above the 1091. per cent. Since this Company dishonourably raised a doubt upon that subject, I have, through my eminent legal advisers, investigated it, and have also the opinion of counsel that there is no doubt whatever that you must be paid the whole of your arrears before the common shareholders can ever receive a farthing of dividend. You know from what is past that I shall continue to do my best.

I am, respectfully,

THOMAS STURGE.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 10, 1853.

THE public in general, and magistrates in particular, will always owe a debt of gratitude to the present Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas for the series of statutes, known as "Jervis's Acts," relating to the duties of justices of the peace when acting out of sessions, and to their protection in the discharge of such duties. These statutes have now been in force for five years, and the practical result of them is daily witnessed, in uniformity of procedure before magistrates; in the more speedy apprehension of offenders, and a due regard to their position as men under the imputation of crime; in the avoidance of technical difficulties, and the prevention of vexatious actions, to which gentlemen burthened with the commission of the peace were formerly exposed. It is to the statute framed for the latter object, namely, the protection to justices from vexatious actions, (11 & 12 Vict. c. 44), and to several decisions which have proceeded thereon, that we propose to call attention on the present occasion. Before the passing of this act, it is scarcely too much to say that magistrates were subject to legal proceedings for almost every slip which they might have committed, however free they might have been from evil intention in the matter, and however unimportant the defect. The wonder is, that any one could have been found willing to incur such responsibilities, especially when the office was exercised without any emolument being attached to it. In nine cases out of ten the plaintiffs were paupers, and therefore, even if the magistrate was successful in obtaining a verdict, he generally had to pay his own costs.

But now, "for any act done by a justice in the execution of his duty with respect to any matter within his jurisdiction," he is liable only to an action on the case, in which it must be expressly alleged and proved that he did it maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause, (sect. 1); and although, "for an act in a matter of which he has not jurisdiction, or in which he shall have exceeded his jurisdiction, any person injured thereby, or by any act done under any conviction, &c. in any such matter," may maintain an action of trespass, as before the act, yet the conviction or order must first be quashed upon appeal, or upon application to the Court of Queen's Bench, (sect. 2). We have been particular in giving the very language of the two sections so far as it was material, especially as difficulties have arisen from the wording of them, which certainly is peculiar. First, the magistrate is protected, in the absence of malice, for any act done "with respect to any matter within his jurisdiction;" but then he is not so protected for any act done "in a matter in which he shall have exceeded his jurisdiction." Now, he might have a general jurisdiction over the matter, and so come literally within the 1st section, and yet the act done might be in excess of such jurisdiction, and so come within the 2nd section. It has, however, been held that the two sections must be read together, and that, in order to reconcile them, a limitation must be put upon the above part of the 2nd section, by confining it to cases where the very act complained of in the action is the one wherein the excess of jurisdiction consists, and that it is not enough that the act was done in a matter in which there was an excess of jurisdiction in other respects. The facts which led to this decision were these:—The defendant, a magistrate, had convicted the plaintiff of unlawful trading on a Sunday, and imposed a penalty, which was to be levied by distress and sale. So far he acted quite rightly, but he exceeded his jurisdiction by ordering the plaintiff, in default of payment, to be set in the stocks, which, however, was never done, but the penalty was levied by distress. An action of trespass was brought, under the 2nd section, for seizing the goods; but the Court held that it was not maintainable, though it would have been otherwise if the plaintiff had been set in the stocks, and had brought his action for putting him into them. (Barton v. Bricknell, 15 Jur., part 1, p. 668; 20 L. J., M. C., 1; and see Leary v. Patrick, 14 Jur., part 1, p. 932; 19 L. J., M. C., 211). This construction gives full effect to the words that the action may be maintained at the suit of any person "injured" by the excess; and the learned author of the statute, in a later case, intimated that the words "exceeding jurisdiction," in the 2nd section, meant, assuming to do something which the act under which he was proceeding could by no possibility justify, as in the case of Leary v. Patrick, where there could have been no authority to issue a distress for costs not adjudged by the conviction; or as was the case in Barton v. Bricknell, in which there was no power to order the plaintiff to be put in the stocks. (Ratt v. Parkinson, 20 L. J., M. C., 208). To this class of cases may be referred Newbould v. Colman, (20 L. J., M. C., 149), in which the guardians of a union, improperly treating two distinct townships as one, made an order upon the overseers thereof for payment of a contribution towards the relief of the poor. The order having been disobeyed, the defendants, who were magistrates, issued a warrant, under which the plaintiff's goods were taken. It was held, first, that the statute under which the magistrates acted (2 & 3 Vict. c. 84) gave them a power similar to that exercised by them in enforcing a legal poor-rate; that the existence of a legal obligation to pay was a necessary preliminary condition to their having any authority to enforce payment; and that, if no such obligation existed, the magistrates had acted without jurisdiction, and were liable in trespass.

The result of the decisions appears to be, that if a magistrate exceed his jurisdiction in a matter over which he has a general jurisdiction, he is liable to an action, if the conviction or order be first quashed, and if the action be brought for the very act wherein the excess of jurisdiction consisted.

It will be observed that protection is given by the statute only where the justice acts in the execution of his duty as such justice. Under stat 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, requiring notice of action to be given to a justice for anything done by him "in the execution of his office," it was stated as a rule, that although the privilege could not be claimed where the act was altogether alio intuitu, yet if it were upon a matter within the general jurisdiction of justices of the peace, one who was in fact such would be presumed to have acted in that character, so as to entitle him to notice. Thus, a lord of a manor, who was also a justice of the peace, was held entitled to notice previous to an action brought against him for taking a gun in the house of an unqualified person, for it was intended that he acted as a justice of the peace according to the powers given by the act then in force, of 5 Ann. c. 14. (Briggs v. Evelyn, 2 H. Bl. 114; Foley on Convictions, 325, 3rd ed.)

THE decision of the House of Lords in Egerton v. Lord Brownlow (not yet reported) has been the theme of great eulogy in the journals of the day devoted to politics. We doubt whether it is equally surrounded with the approbation of lawyers. Of course, as the decision of the House of Lords, it is the law on the particular point decided in it, and it would be idle to question its validity. But if it be, as we think it is, founded on most weak and fallacious reasoning, it may not be useless to analyse that reasoning, for the purpose of shewing, that, though a binding decision, it ought only to be followed just so far as it goes, and no further.

The principle of the decision seems simple enough, on the question of the condition being void as against the policy of the law. The House of Lords assumed—and it is not for us to contradict their Lordships on such a point—that, in fact and in practice, it is not the Crown, but the Minister of the day, who makes peers; and that, in fact and in practice, there is a tendency in a Minister to make a man a peer on account of his wealth; in other words, that to give to a man a large fortune on condition that if he does not become a peer it is to go from him, is to hold out an inducement to him to bribe, directly or indirectly, the Minister of the Crown for a peerage, and that the Minister of the Crown must be assumed to be bribable. The latter assumption is quite necessary to support their Lordships' reasoning, because, whatever might be said of the sense of a condition tending to induce a man to do something impossible, it could not be against the policy of the law. In order to bring the case within that doctrine, the inducement must be to do a thing assumed to be possible; and the question is, does the law assume a Minister of State to be capable of a criminal motive in a case where an honourable one is possible? As we read the reasoning of the House of Lords, their Lordships do take that to be an assumption of the law. Whether it is a good assumption, in the science of the political management of Legislatures, we do not inquire; but, as an assumption of the law of England, it is rather new. Nevertheless, it is a decision of the House of Lords.

The values of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum, held on each of the single lives, to be added together, (from Table I), and from this sum the value of an annuity held on the joint continuance of the two lives (from Table II) to be subtracted; the result is the value of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum, held on the longest of the two lives.

Rule for determining the Value of an Annuity of 100*l.* per Annum, held on the joint Continuance of Three Lives.

The value of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum on the joint continuance of the two elder lives is to be found from Table II. The age of a single life of the same (or nearest) value, with the annuity on the said joint lives, to be found from Table I. The value of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum on the joint continuance of this life and the younger life from Table II, 5*l.* being deducted from this sum, the remainder is the value of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum held on the joint continuance of the three lives.

Rule for determining the Value of an Annuity of 100*l.* per Annum, held on the longest of Three Lives.

The values of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum for each of the three single lives to be extracted from Table I, and to be added together. The value of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum on the joint continuance of the two youngest lives, also the value of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum on the joint continuance of the two eldest lives, also the value of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum on the joint continuance of the oldest life and the youngest life, (all found by Table II), to be subtracted from the sum or addition of the annuities on the three single lives: to the result is to be added the value of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum held on the joint continuance of the three lives; the amount is the value of an annuity of 100*l.* per annum on the longest of the three lives.

Further Rule.

And in all cases where the annuity shall be for more than three lives, the same shall be valued as an annuity for the three youngest of such lives; and where the annuity shall be given for a longer term of years than ninety-five years, or in perpetuity, the same shall be valued as an annuity for ninety-five years only.

Whereas doubts have arisen as to the construction of the Copyhold Acts, and also of the act of the 14 & 15 Vict. [c. 104], "to facilitate the Management and Improvement of Episcopal and Capitular Estates in England," and as to the powers under the provisions of the first-recited acts of ecclesiastical corporations, sole or aggregate, to enfranchise lands, and of the Copyhold Commissioners to confirm or consent to such enfranchisements, and to nominate trustees to receive and apply money paid for such enfranchisements; and it is expedient to remove such doubts, and further to amend the said Copyhold Acts: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. The provisions of the Copyhold Acts concerning the commutation of manorial rights in lands and the enfranchisement of lands, and concerning the payment of monies to be paid for enfranchisement where the lord is only entitled to a limited estate or interest, or is under legal disability, shall be deemed to have extended, and subject to the provisions herein contained shall continue to extend, to lands holden of any ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, and lands parcel of any manor belonging to any such corporation, and the application of the said provisions, or any of them, to such lands, shall not be deemed to have been interfered with by the said act of the 14 & 15 Vict.

2. No commutation or enfranchisement by any ecclesiastical corporation, sole or aggregate, already made or purporting to be made under the Copyhold Acts, or any of them, or to be made in pursuance of any agreement already approved of by the Copyhold Commissioners, shall be impeached by reason of the consideration or part of the consideration for the same having been or being a surrender of any lands held for a life or lives or years without right of renewal, or for any terminable or limited estate or interest.

3. All lands, except as hereinafter excepted, which are capable of enfranchisement by the exercise of any powers contained in any other act of Parliament, or which may be otherwise enfranchised irrespectively of the Copyhold Acts, shall also be capable of being enfranchised under the powers and provisions of the Copyhold Acts, and by the sole authority of those powers and provisions, and without any other consent or authority than such as is required by the provisions of the same acts: provided always, that lands held for a life or lives or for years of any manor belonging, either in possession or reversion, to any ecclesiastical corporation, where the tenant of such lands hath not a right of renewal, shall not hereafter be dealt with under the Copyhold Acts, except in the cases hereinafter particularly mentioned.

4. Whenever proceedings which have been or shall be commenced under the provisions of the Copyhold Acts for the enfranchisement of any lands shall terminate in enfranchisement, and it shall appear to the Copyhold Commissioners that the enfranchisement was one which might have been effected under the provisions of the said act of the 14 & 15 Vict. [c. 104], the monies or rent-charges which form the consideration of such enfranchisement shall be paid and applied to the same account and in the same manner as if such enfranchisement had been effected under the said act of the 14 & 15 Vict. [c. 104], and all the provisions of the said last-mentioned act which affect the application of enfranchisement monies under that act shall be applicable to such enfranchisements as aforesaid made under the provisions of the Copyhold Acts, and the Church Estates Commissioners and Ecclesiastical Commissioners shall respectively have the same powers over such consideration monies, or the interest accruing thereon, or upon land, rent-charges, or securities acquired in respect thereof, and also over or against any ecclesiastical corporation interested therein, as such commissioners respectively would have had if such enfranchisement had been effected with the consent of the said Church Estates Commissioners, and under the provisions of the said act of the 14 & 15 Vict. [c. 104]; and where the consideration money for any such enfranchisement has been paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery ex parte the Copyhold Commission, and has not been invested, the said Accountant-General shall, upon the order of the Court of Chancery to be made upon a petition to be presented to the said Court by the said Ecclesiastical Commissioners, cause such money to be paid or transferred to such account in the Bank of England as the said Church Estates Commissioners shall in each case appoint: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said Court to order that all the costs and expenses incurred in the obtaining of such order shall be paid out of such money previous to its payment or transfer to the account appointed by the said Church Estates Commissioners; and in case of various funds being included in the said order, to direct the distribution of such costs amongst the several funds in such manner as the said Court shall think fit.

5. And whereas, in cases of enfranchisement by ecclesiastical corporations effected or purporting to be effected under the Copyhold Acts, the monies paid for enfranchisement for the lord's rights have been paid into the hands of trustees nominated under the hands and seal of the Copyhold Commissioners, to be applied by the said trustees, with the consent of the said commissioners, in the manner directed and specified in the said Copyhold Acts of and concerning any money to be paid for enfranchising under the said acts into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery: be it enacted, that in all cases where trustees have been so appointed by the said commissioners, such appointments shall be deemed to be, and the same are hereby declared to be, valid and effectual, and within the scope and intent of the 14th section of the act of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 23, and such trustees are hereby declared to have and to have had all such powers and liabilities; and all acts done by such trustees, and all consents and confirmations by the Copyhold Commissioners in relation to the acts of such trustees, shall be and are declared to have been as valid and effectual as in the case of other trustees nominated according to the scope and intent of the said section of the said last-mentioned act.

6. Provided always, that in all cases wherein trustees have been so appointed by the said Copyhold Commissioners, and shall stand possessed of monies paid for enfranchisement of lands subject to manorial or other rights of ecclesiastical corporations, or of lands or securities in respect thereof, the Copyhold Commissioners shall, by an order under their hands and seal, direct such trustees to pay over the monies of which they may so stand possessed, or to convey such land or transfer such securities, to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of England, who are hereby required to accept the same, and to apply such monies, land, or securities respectively, and the land or securities to be purchased with such money respectively, in the manner directed and specified in the Copyhold Acts of and concerning any money to be paid for enfranchising under the said acts into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery.

7. When such trustees shall have paid over, conveyed, or transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in pursuance of this act, the whole of the monies, land, or securities of which they may so stand possessed as aforesaid, their liabilities as such trustees in respect of any such monies, land, or securities shall cease and determine, and the expenses of all such payments, conveyances, or transfers shall be paid by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners out of any monies that may come into their possession in respect of the money, land, or securities so to be paid over, conveyed, or transferred.

8. All agreements for the enfranchisement of lands held of any ecclesiastical corporation for a life or lives or for years, where the tenants thereof have not a right of renewal, which have been entered into with the consent of the Copyhold Commissioners before the passing of this act, shall be valid and effectual, and such enfranchisements shall be capable of being completed under the Copyhold Acts, notwithstanding the proviso hereinbefore contained, but the money to be paid for such enfranchisements shall be paid and applied in the manner hereinbefore particularly mentioned; and a recital in the instrument of enfranchisement, or an indorsement thereon, under the seal of the Copyhold Commissioners, that the agreement for such enfranchisement was entered into, with such consent as aforesaid, before the passing of this act, shall be conclusive evidence thereof.

9. LONDON, SEPTEMBER 17, 1853.

In a recent number of THE JURIST we offered some observations on the prospects of the Profession, particularly of the existing Bar, and those observations were certainly not hopeful. They have, however, as we gather from the remarks upon that paper which have reached our ears, been somewhat misunderstood; for it seems that we have been thought to mean that the Bar had seen its best days, and that its glory had departed from it, never to return. That was not at all our meaning, nor have we any such idea of there being a probability of ultimate destruction to the Bar—at least, not in this century. On the contrary, it appears to us, that from the course which legal reforms are taking, may be prognosticated a more useful and elevated position for the Bar of England than it has enjoyed for a long time. Of the position occupied by the Bar from the middle of the last century to the end of the first quarter of this, it is needless to say much. During that period the business of the Bar was lucrative, and its position distinguished; it was the road to honour and distinction, alike for the descendant of nobles and the son of the plebeian. The practice of the law, though somewhat technical and tortuous, was not sufficiently so in the last century to shock the feelings or thwart the interests of that portion of the community which involved itself in law; and so things continued till the peace of 1815. From that time, the English community devoting itself, as before, principally to trade, but not, as before, almost without any rivals; and various political changes, consequent upon great manufacturing changes, having taken place; it came to pass that commerce spread itself, as it were, infinitely, instead of being confined in a comparatively small circle; personal property immensely increased, and became more diffused; and a sort of fourth estate or second middle class, consisting of the minor trading classes, grew up. From this followed a greater amount of smaller litigation, almost unknown to even our grandfathers; and a corresponding indisposition to expense and delay in litigation. Thus began the popular desire for cheap law and county courts—for short and simple pleadings and speedy process. But, in the meantime, its imagined lucrativeness, its apparent distinction of social position, and the redundancy of supply for peaceful professions and occupations, had greatly overfilled the ranks of the Bar; while, on the other hand, the gradual increase of lengthiness, and merely technical complication, which had taken place under the old system of pleading and procedure, had lowered the quality of forensic business, while it had increased its volume and lucrativeness; so that a much inferior degree and amount of intellect were sufficient to enable the barrister to get through the average duties of his profession. Thus things remained till the great changes of the last few years began a totally new era for the legal profession; and the character of those changes, and the rapidity with which they are now taking place, ought to satisfy the most sceptical that a very different career lies before the rising Bar of this country, from that which has been the lot of the lawyers of the last and the present generation.

We are speaking, of course, of the average of the class, not of those distinguished exceptions for whose talents there has always been a certain amount of work of a high class, and who have shewn themselves in all periods of the modern history of the law, adequate to the occasion. But henceforth there will be no such thing as forensic work for a "dull dog;" all the work of the Bar will be work requiring the higher qualifications of the advocate; knowledge of principles, not only of English law, but of general jurisprudence; general information; above all, a broad, large intellect, seeing and going direct to the substance of questions. As these qualities will be absolutely required, no amount of nepotism will be able to drag forward the man who is without them, and the Bar will be a sort of corps d'élite, depending for its position upon its intrinsic ability, and recovering the social estimation and distinction from which the perpetuation of the old system of practice was well nigh precipitating it.

Such are the views which we take of the state of transition, of which the Bar is now suffering the agony. No doubt, before the new state of things is finally and completely developed, many individuals will suffer. Many of the old school will find themselves unwilling or unable to adopt the new ideas and the new system; many who never were by nature or study fitted for any but the most routine part of the old business of the Bar, will be, perforce, extinguished as barristers, by the destruction of the only business they could transact. But the brighter and more powerful spirits of the present Bar will remain, and the new Bar, or, if we may import a cant word, the Young England Bar of the remaining half of this century, will be probably distinguished above any body of lawyers that has yet aided in administering the justice of the country.

Whereas an act was passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 12 & 13 Vict. [c. 77], intituled "An Act further to facilitate the Sale and Transfer of Incumbered Estates in Ireland:" and whereas, under the provisions of the said act, certain commissioners were duly appointed during her Majesty's pleasure for the execution of the said act: and whereas it is expedient to amend the said act in certain particulars, and to continue the powers of the said commissioners for the further term hereinafter mentioned: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Where application has been made under the said act, or shall hereafter be made under the said act and this act, or either of them, for a sale of any land or of any lease within sects. 16 and 17 of the said act, and all or any of the incumbrances affecting such land or lease also affects any lease of land in Ireland not within the said sects. 16 and 17 of the said act, application may be made for sale of such last-mentioned lease; and the jurisdiction and powers of the commissioners, and all the provisions of the said act, shall extend and be applicable to such last-mentioned lease, in like manner as in the case of a lease within the said sects. 16 and 17 of the said act.

2. The 22nd section of the said recited act shall be and the same is hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof be it enacted, that the commissioners shall not make an order for sale of any land or lease, or any part thereof, upon application by an incumbrancer on such land or lease, in case it be shewn to the satisfaction of the commissioners by the owner of such land or lease that no part of such land or lease is subject to any receiver, or in the possession of any incumbrancer, and that the amount of the yearly interest on the incumbrances, and other yearly payments (if any) in respect of charges payable out of the income of such land or lease and the other lands or leases (if any) subject to the incumbrance of such incumbrancer, do not exceed one-half of the net yearly income (after the payment of all tithe rent-charge, such part of the county cess and poor's-rate as is payable by the owner, and all crown, quit, and head rent) of such land or lease, or of all the lands or leases so subject: provided always, that the decision of the said commissioners thereupon shall in all cases, so far as relates to the power and jurisdiction of the commissioners over such land or lease, be final and conclusive, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

3. Where the commissioners have ordered or shall order the sale of any lease in perpetuity, they may, if they shall think it expedient so to do, cause notice to be given to the owner or other persons interested in the reversion, or any person on behalf of such owner or other persons, and may thereupon proceed to convert such lease in perpetuity into a fee-farm grant, according to the principles prescribed in the Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act, but their procedure in relation thereto shall be according to the general rules and practice of the court of the said commissioners, and in case such conversion shall be ordered, they shall have power to convey the land included in such lease to the purchaser in fee, subject to the fee-farm rent ascertained as aforesaid, and to such exceptions, reversions, covenants, and clauses as shall be in conformity with the original lease, and the provisions of the Renewable Leasehold Conversion Act, and thereupon the owner for the time being shall have the same rights and remedies against the purchaser, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and against the land, by action, distress, entry, or otherwise, in respect of such rent, and of any exceptions, reservations, covenants, and clauses contained in the said deed, as belong by law to the owner of any fee-farm rent created under the said act.

4. Where any instrument purporting to be a demise or lease, or any other grant or assurance reserving rent, executed or made by any person entitled under any lease of land, is, in construction of law, an assignment of such lease, sects. 16 and 17 of the said recited act, and all other the provisions of the said act and this act, which would, in case such instrument, grant, or assurance had passed less than the whole term or estate created by such lease, have been applicable to or in respect of the reversion created under such instrument, grant, or assurance, shall extend and apply, and shall be deemed to have extended and applied, to and in respect of the rent thereby reserved, and all rights and interests thereunder vested in grantor or assignor, in like manner as such provisions would have been applicable to or in respect of such reversion.

5. Where any conveyance or assignment has been made before the passing of this act, or shall hereafter be made, by the commissioners, subject to any lease, underlease, or tenancy, such conveyance or assignment shall be deemed to afford conclusive proof that the estate or interest purporting to be conveyed or assigned thereby is the reversion expectant upon such lease, underlease, or tenancy, and it shall not be necessary, in any action arising out of or connected with such lease, underlease, or tenancy, or in any pleadings in such action, to allege or prove the title of such reversion prior to the said conveyance or assignment; and the person to whom such conveyance or assignment is made, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and every of them, shall and may have and enjoy like advantages against the lessees, underlessees, and tenants, their heirs, executors, administrators, assigns, and under-tenants, and against all other persons in possession or occupation of the land comprised in such conveyance or assignment, by distress or by entry, for non-payment of rent or for doing of waste or other forfeiture, and also shall and may have and enjoy like advantages and remedies by action for not performing other conditions, covenants, and agreements contained in such lease or underlease, or in the parol agreement for such tenancy, against the said lessees, underlessees, and tenants, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, as the person granting such lease or underlease, or as the landlord entering into the agreement for such tenancy, or his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, ought to have had and enjoyed at any time or times, in like manner and form as if the reversion in such land expectant on such lease, underlease, and tenancy had remained or continued in such person granting such lease or underlease, or as landlord entering into such agreement.

6. Where there is or shall be an application to the commissioners for the sale of any undivided share of any land or lease, it shall be lawful for the commissioners, where they shall see fit so to do, upon the application of the owner of any other undivided share or shares of the same land or lease, (and although such other undivided share be not subject to any incumbrance), or on the application of any incumbrancer on such other undivided share or shares, to include the same share or shares, upon such terms as they shall see fit, with the share so proposed to be sold as aforesaid, and in every such case the commissioners shall apportion the purchase money among the owners according to their respective shares so sold, and shall apportion the expenses as they may see fit.

7. The 37th section of the said recited act shall apply and be deemed to have at all times applied to any rent reserved upon a lease, where the commissioners shall have sold or shall sell the whole reversion expectant upon such lease at different times or in different lots.

8. The commissioners shall have power, upon any application for sale, whether now pending before them or to be hereafter made, to sell and convey any land, subject to any right, title, or estate to or in dower.

9. Where a sale is made by the commissioners under the said act, or this act, of any land or lease, it shall be lawful for them, whenever it shall appear to them convenient so to do, to include in such sale all or any part of the arrears of rent, if any, which may at the time of the sale be owing from any lessees or tenants, subject to whose leases or tenancies the sale is to be made, where such arrears are subject to any incumbrance in respect of which an incumbrancer shall have obtained an order for sale, or where the order for sale has been obtained by the owner, and in the conveyance or assignment of such land or lease to assign such arrears to the purchaser accordingly; and such purchaser, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, shall, after such assignment of the said arrears, have for the recovery and in respect of the non-payment thereof the same rights and remedies which the person or persons who would have been entitled to such arrears would have possessed if no such assignment thereof, nor any conveyance or assignment of such land or lease, had been made.

10. All general rules or orders heretofore made by the commissioners shall apply and have reference to the provisions of this act as well as to those of the said recited act, and that in the construction of this act the words and phrases to which a particular or extended meaning is assigned by the 54th section of the said recited act, shall when used in this act be understood to bear such particular or extended meaning, except where the context requires a different construction; and that in the construction of the said recited act the word "lease" shall include and shall be deemed to have included any term created by way of use, as well as any term created by way of demise at common law, so as such term be or have become a term in gross.

11. The 5th section of the said act, whereby it is enacted that no commissioner, secretary, or other officer should hold his office for a longer period than is therein mentioned, shall be and the same is hereby repealed; and every such commissioner, secretary, or other officer may hold his office for a term not exceeding four years from the passing of this act, and thenceforth until the end of the then next session of Parliament; and all applications which under the 16th and 17th sections of the said act, or under this act, might be made to the said commissioners within three years from the passing of the said act, and which under the act passed in the last session of Parliament, [15 & 16 Vict. c. 67], intituled "An Act to continue the Powers of applying for a Sale of Lands under the Act for facilitating the Sale and Transfer of Incumbered Estates in Ireland," may now be made within four years from the passing of the said first-mentioned act, may be made within two years from the 28th day of July, 1853; and all orders and proceedings by the said acts or by this act authorised, and which might be made, had, or taken upon any application made within the said period of four years, may be made, had, and taken within the further period authorised by this act.

12. In the case of any petition for a sale presented after the passing of this act, the costs of the petitioner in respect of such petition and of any proceedings thereunder shall not (unless the commissioners shall otherwise direct) be payable out of the proceeds of the sale otherwise than in the same order of priority in which the incumbrance of the petitioner shall be payable, anything in the said recited acts, or any rule or practice of the commissioners, to the contrary notwithstanding.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 24, 1853.

THE celebrated case of Smyth v. Smyth affords a striking instance of the liability of solicitors to become unwitting utterers of forged documents, and unconscious agents in the fraudulent schemes of specious knaves, who are introduced to them as clients. Viewed in this light, it has an important bearing upon the case of Mr. Barber, the attorney, whose cause we, in common with the almost entire press of the country, have advocated from time to time. He and his friends are still appealing to the public; they court investigation and discussion; pamphlets abounding with facts and arguments in his favour are frequently appearing, and from these, which are accessible to all, we have gathered sufficient materials for the purpose of instituting our comparison and supporting our commentary.

In Smyth v. Smyth the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to the estates of the late Sir Hugh Smyth, Bart., of Ashton Hall, Somerset, worth about 30,000*l.* a year. He was introduced by Mr. Shadwell, of the Chancery Bar, to Mr. Cattlin, the attorney, who brought an action of ejectment. The case was supported by testamentary documents, family bibles, seals, and other alleged family relics; but the case mainly depended upon the evidence of the plaintiff himself, who, on cross-examination, completely broke down. By his own account he was the only son of the deceased baronet by a first and secret marriage; he had in infancy been put out to nurse to a carpenter's wife, named Provis; he had been educated at Winchester, and had since moved in the first society; had travelled much; had been the intimate associate of Bell and Lancaster; had, in conjunction with them, delivered lectures in foreign countries; had since delivered lectures "in almost every school in England;" and his life had been entirely devoted to the business of education.

On cross-examination it was elicited that this classically-educated scholar and lecturer was so illiterate that he could not spell the commonest words in his own language; and it is stated, that at the time he had sworn he was ill for eighteen months, he was undergoing imprisonment in Ilchester gaol, his sentence having been commuted from that of death, for horse-stealing! From facts which have since been made public, it appears that when he committed this felony he was a menial servant, and had married a servant in Sir Hugh Smyth's family, who separated from him on his being prosecuted for an abominable crime, in which he gave bail and absconded! As the plaintiff's case crumbled to pieces from its own weakness, no witnesses were called for the defence; but the defendant was prepared to prove the whole story of the plaintiff to be a tissue of falsehoods, supported by forgeries and devices, which, on the very first examination, appeared flagrant and palpable.

Such was the person and such the case which imposed upon Mr. Shadwell, upon the very experienced solicitor, Mr. Cattlin, upon the three counsel who conducted the case, and last, but not least, upon (as is stated) "four gentlemen of the Israelitish persuasion, who had subscribed 1000*l.* each on bonds to secure the moderate interest of 1000*l.* each per annum."

The case occupied many months in preparation, in the course of which the claimant's solicitor travelled with him to Ireland and other places, and had investigated the case with so much minuteness, that of the persons whom he had examined he subpoenaed no less than one hundred and forty. So confident was the plaintiff's counsel, Mr. Bovill, although he knew the defence to be that his client was an impostor, that in presenting the case to the jury he said, "I will prove beyond all doubt that my client is the son of Sir Hugh Smyth."

When at length the claimant stood unmasked, his case was abandoned, and he himself taken into custody on charges of forgery and perjury; but Sir Frederick Thesiger, who conducted the case for the defendant, declared, in the most unqualified terms, that he had "no doubt whatever that both Mr. Shadwell and Mr. Cattlin had been most grossly imposed upon, and that all who had taken up the plaintiff's case so warmly had acted most honestly, though they were certainly mistaken—they had no intention of bringing forward a false case. They must now see that they had been entirely deceived, and must be satisfied that a gross deception had been practised upon them, though under that deception they had acted honestly." To perfect this exculpation, the learned judge who tried the cause, Mr. Justice Coleridge, said he heard the statement which Sir Frederick Thesiger had made with "great satisfaction."

Now, knowing, as every member of the Profession does, how insensibly a lawyer's feelings become enlisted and his judgment biased on the side of his own client, who is always disposed and at hand to explain every circumstance favourably to his own case, we feel no difficulty in concurring in the very high and complete exculpation which the legal agents of this impostor have received. But we invite the reader to compare the prominent features of this case with those of any of the cases in which Mr. Barber was professionally concerned, and for a supposed guilty knowledge of which he has so fearfully suffered.

Mr. Cattlin, when this business was introduced to him, was a London attorney of some twenty years' experience, of high repute for skill and legal attainments, and for that reason, doubtless, recommended by Mr. Shadwell for the conduct of this important case. Mr. Barber, when first instructed by Fletcher, had but recently commenced practice in London, after serving his articles in the country.

The person who imposed upon Mr. Cattlin was an illiterate adventurer, who had led an "eventful life," wandering over Europe, having no settled habitation. Fletcher was a retired surgeon of large property, respected in the neighbourhood, where he had resided and brought up his family for twenty years. Mr. Cattlin had travelled about with his client apparently for weeks together. Mr. Barber, it appears, never spent at any one time an hour in Fletcher's company, or broke bread with him. The conversation and correspondence of Mr. Cattlin's client must have been found to accord very ill with his learned pretensions; his tale, if investigated, must have been discovered (as it was by the defendant's agents) to be a gross fabrication. His claim had to be supported by most elaborate and complicated evidence, which afforded many opportunities for detecting its falsehood: those of Mr. Barber's clients were direct and simple. Provis's claim was from the first scouted by the defendant and his legal adviser as an impudent imposture: those which Mr. Barber and his partner supported were never disputed. In Smyth's case the professional bill of the solicitor for the claimant would probably amount to several thousand pounds: that of Mr. Barber and partner, in Slack's case, was but 13*l.*, his only advantage in the transaction (in which Fletcher and the pretended Emma Slack realised between them 4600*l.*) being 6*l.* 10*s.*

The case of this impostor Provis has not only been universally regarded by the press, upon review, as a bungling and preposterous fraud, but it was so viewed by almost every one who heard the evidence as it proceeded, especially that of the plaintiff himself; yet this man must have been previously subjected to lengthened, minute, and frequent interrogation from his own legal advisers; but so far from knowledge, or even suspicion, of fraud being imputed to either of these gentlemen, they have received from the highest quarters a spontaneous and unqualified exculpation.

Surely, when such implicit faith is placed in the bona fides of those who brought even such a cause as this into court, justice requires that at least as favourable a construction should be extended to a man in the position of Mr. Barber.

We insert the following observations by a correspondent:—

In the spring of the present year the judges of the county courts were requested to send to the Audit-office at Somerset House, for enrolment, "the instruments by which they were appointed judges," and it was stated that "the document would be returned to them after it had been enrolled in the books of the office." The documents have not been returned, but, on the contrary, have, as it appears, been handed to the Commissioners of Stamps; and the Lords of the Treasury have just issued a circular calling on the county court judges to pay the duty of 7*5l.* each for their appointment, together with a penalty of 10*l.* in those cases in which the appointments bear date more than a year before the stamps are affixed. This seems a strong proceeding, considering that under the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 66, no writing whatever is required for the appointment of a county court judge. The writings issued by Lord Cottenham, on making appointments, were for the purpose principally of pointing out the districts of the judges, the appointments of the judges themselves being valid without writing. It may be reasonably doubted whether the provision of the stat. 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, tit. "Grant," is not to be restricted to those cases in which a writing is necessary, especially considering the principles by which revenue acts are generally construed. The effect of the decision of the Lords Commissioners is to compel a county court judge, who may be appointed to a fresh district under sect. 19 of the County Courts Act, to pay another sum of 7*5l.*, and so on toties quoties. It should seem that some further consideration is necessary in this matter.

And with respect to the several officers in lunacy, be it further enacted as follows:—

6. There shall be two Masters in Lunacy, who shall hold their offices during good behaviour, and the present Masters in Lunacy shall be continued and be the Masters in Lunacy during good behaviour, and the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time, as any vacancy shall occur in the office of Master in Lunacy, appoint a fit person, being a serjeant or barrister-at-law of not less than ten years' standing at the bar, to fill the vacancy, and the person to be so appointed shall, before being capable of acting as Master in Lunacy, take before the Lord Chancellor, in the manner now used, the oath set forth in the second schedule hereunder written, and the Masters in Lunacy for the time being shall have the same rank and precedence as the present Masters now take.

7. The Masters in Lunacy shall have, perform, and execute all the powers, duties, and authorities which were at the time of the passing of the act of the session of Parliament holden in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 84, had, performed, and executed by commissioners named in commissions in the nature of writs de lunatico inquirendo.

8. All the inquiries and matters connected with the persons and estates of lunatics which were at the time of the passing of the last-mentioned act of Parliament usually referred to the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery (except inquiries and matters which may be or might have been referred under the Trustees Act, 1850, or any act thereby repealed) shall henceforth, where references shall be made, be referred to the Masters in Lunacy, who shall have, perform, and execute all the powers, duties, and authorities relating to the inquiries and matters so to be referred to them as aforesaid which were at the time last aforesaid had, performed, and executed by the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, and shall perform such other duties for the security and advantage of lunatics and their estates as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall from time to time direct.

9. All the powers and authorities by or under this act vested or to be vested in the Masters shall be joint and several, and they shall execute commissions and conduct inquiries connected with lunatics or their estates, and perform all other duties committed or to be committed to them by or by virtue of any act hereby repealed, or this act, either separately or together, and at such places, within such times, and in such manner as any general order in lunacy, and, subject thereto, as any special order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, shall from time to time direct.

10. The Lord Chancellor shall have, as at present, an officer called "The Registrar in Lunacy," who shall perform the duties committed to him by or by virtue of this act, and such other duties connected with lunatics and their estates, at such places, within such times, and in such manner, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time direct.

11. The Masters and the Registrar respectively shall continue to discharge all duties which formerly belonged to the office of Clerk of the Custodies of Idiots and Lunatics, and which were, under the provisions of the act of the session of Parliament holden in the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 84, on the abolition of that office, transferred to them respectively, so far as the same may be necessary to be discharged, according to the practice for the time being subsisting in lunacy.

12. The Masters shall receive salaries of 2000*l.* per annum each; and the Lord Chancellor may, on a petition presented to him for that purpose, order (if he shall so think fit) annuities, not exceeding the sum of 1200*l.* each, to be paid to the persons continued and to be appointed Masters respectively, if and when they respectively shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling them respectively from the due execution of their respective offices, and shall be desirous of resigning the same.

13. The Lord Chancellor may by order remove any one of the Masters in Lunacy to be appointed after the commencement of this act, who shall be afflicted with any permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, and who shall refuse to resign or be incapable of resigning the same, and may, upon such removal, order to be paid to him an annuity or retiring allowance not exceeding in amount two equal third parts of his yearly salary.

14. The Registrar shall receive such salary as the Lord Chancellor, with the approbation of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, has directed or shall from time to time direct.

15. Such officers, clerks, and messengers shall and may be from time to time appointed by the Masters and the Registrar respectively in their respective offices as the Lord Chancellor, with the approbation of the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, has directed or shall from time to time direct, but the appointment of the chief clerk of the Masters shall be made with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor; and the present officers, clerks, and messengers shall be continued as if this act had not been passed, and without prejudice to any right or claim of them or any of them in respect of length of service or otherwise; and the officers, clerks, and messengers for the time being shall respectively receive such salaries as the Lord Chancellor, with the approbation of the said Commissioners of the Treasury, has directed or shall from time to time direct.

16. There shall be two medical visitors and one legal visitor of lunatics, who shall hold their offices during pleasure; and the present visitors shall be continued and be the visitors during pleasure; and the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time, as any vacancy shall occur in the office of medical visitor or legal visitor, appoint, by writing under his hand, a fit person, being a physician in actual practice, to succeed a medical visitor, and a fit person, being a barrister of not less than five years' standing, to succeed a legal visitor.

17. The Masters for the time being shall, by virtue of their appointments to be Masters, become and be visitors of lunatics jointly with the visitors for the time being.

18. No person shall be appointed to be a visitor who shall be or shall have been within the two years then next preceding directly or indirectly interested in the keeping of any house licensed for the reception of insane persons; and if any person shall after his appointment become so interested, his appointment as visitor shall ipso facto become null and void, and thereupon his salary shall cease.

19. The medical visitors shall receive such salaries, not exceeding the sum of 500*l.* per annum each, and the legal visitor to be appointed after the commencement of this act shall receive such salary, not exceeding the like sum, as the Lord Chancellor, with the approbation of the said Commissioners of the Treasury, shall from time to time order; and the salary of the present legal visitor shall remain at its present amount.

20. The medical and legal visitors and the Masters, or so many of them, not being less than three in number, as may from time to time be able, consistently with the discharge of their other duties, to attend, shall from time to time form themselves into a board for their mutual guidance and direction on matters connected with the visiting of lunatics; and the board shall be at liberty to report to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid upon any matter connected with the duties of the visitors or of the board, as they think proper.

21. Where a medical or a legal visitor is temporarily prevented from discharging his duty by illness or unavoidable absence, but not otherwise, he may, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, appoint a physician in actual practice, or a barrister of not less than five years' standing, (as the case may require), to act in his stead during his illness or unavoidable absence; and the physician or the barrister so appointed shall, while his appointment remains in force, have, perform, and execute all the powers, duties, and authorities belonging to the office of medical visitor or of legal visitor (as the case may be) with full validity and effect to all intents and purposes.

22. There shall be a secretary to the visitors, who shall hold his office during pleasure; and the present secretary shall be continued and be the secretary during pleasure; and the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time, as a vacancy shall occur in the office of secretary, appoint, by writing under his hand, a fit person to fill the vacancy.

23. The secretary shall receive such salary, not exceeding the sum of 300*l.* per annum, as the Lord Chancellor has ordered or shall from time to time order; and a clerk to the secretary may be appointed by him, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor, who shall receive such salary, not exceeding the sum of 150*l.* per annum, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time order.

24. Such allowances as the Lord Chancellor, with the approbation of the said Commissioners of the Treasury, shall from time to time order, shall be made to the masters and the visitors for their respective travelling and other expenses, and to the masters and the registrar, and the secretary to the visitors, (but in the latter case under the direction of the visitors), for providing and maintaining suitable offices, and for the other expenses incident to the discharge of the duties of their respective offices.

25. All salaries and annuities continued or given by or under this act (inclusive of the salaries of the visitors and their secretary, as from the day on which the account, intitled "The Account of the Board of Visitors for the better Care and Treatment of Lunatics," shall be closed as hereinafter mentioned) shall grow due from day to day, and the same, with all allowances continued or given by or under this act, (inclusive of the allowances to the visitors and their secretary as from the same day), shall be payable and paid under order of the Lord Chancellor to the several persons entitled thereto, or to their respective executors or administrators, out of the fund standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the account intitled "The Suits' Fee Fund Account," on the 3rd February, the 3rd May, the 3rd August, and the 3rd November in every year, or on such other days as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time direct, free from deduction; and all such salaries, annuities, and allowances as aforesaid which are continued by or under this act shall be payable out of the aforesaid fund in such priority as they respectively would have had if the several acts hereby repealed had not been repealed; and all such salaries, annuities, and allowances as aforesaid, which are or shall be originally by or under this act charged upon the aforesaid fund, shall be payable and paid out of the same fund, subject and without prejudice to the payment of all other sums of money by any former act or acts now in force directed or authorised to be paid thereout.

And whereas it would greatly facilitate the simplification and improvement of the practice in lunacy, and would be attended with convenience and with a saving of expense to the estates of lunatics, that the charges incident to the administration of the estates of lunatics under the authority of the Lord Chancellor should be defrayed in part by means of a per-centage, graduated in an equitable manner as between the richer and poorer estates, and in part by means of fees on proceedings: be it therefore enacted as follows:—

26. A per-centage on the respective clear annual incomes of all lunatics shall be paid according to the several rates following; that is to say—

The rate of 4*l.* per centum for each clear annual income amounting to 100*l.* and not amounting to 1000*l.*, but so that no larger sum be payable in any such case in any one year than 30*l.*;

The rate of 3*l.* per centum for each clear annual income amounting to 1000*l.* and not amounting to 5000*l.*, but so that no larger sum be payable in any such case in any one year than 100*l.*; and

The rate of 2*l.* per centum for each clear annual income amounting to 5000*l.* or upwards, but so that no larger sum be payable in any such case in any one year than 200*l.*;

And in every case the fractional parts less than one moiety of the pound sterling shall be disregarded in the calculation of the amount payable for per-centage, and shall not be levied or paid.

27. The Masters shall from time to time certify what is the amount of each such clear annual income as aforesaid, and of the per-centage payable thereon, and who is the committee or other person who is to pay the same, and thereupon such committee or other person as aforesaid shall pay the same out of the first monies coming to his hands in respect of the income of the lunatic.

28. The per-centage aforesaid, or a proportionate part thereof, (as the case may require), shall be chargeable and charged upon the estate of a lunatic, and be payable thereout, although before payment thereof he die, or the inquisition in his case be superseded, or be vacated and discharged on a traverse; but in either of the two cases last aforesaid the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may, if he see fit, remit or reduce the amount of the sum to be paid; and the payment of the amount in every case shall be enforced in such manner and under such regulations as the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance of the Lords Justices, being intrusted as aforesaid, shall from time to time direct.

29. All fees now payable in relation to proceedings in lunacy shall be and the same are hereby abolished, and in lieu thereof there shall be paid the following fees only; that is to say—

For each order or fiat of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid .....	£2	0	0
For each report or certificate of the Masters and Taxing Masters respectively (other than a certificate of the Masters respecting income and per-centage only) .....	1	0	0
For attending any court by the clerk, per diem .....	1	0	0

And for all ingrossments, transcripts, and copies of documents and papers, the actual amount of the stationer's charges paid by the Masters and Registrar respectively for the same.

30. The Lord Chancellor may, with the advice and assistance aforesaid, by order, from time to time reduce the several rates of per-centage aforesaid, or any of them; and again, if it shall seem to him expedient, from time to time raise the same several rates, or any of them, but not to rates higher than those respectively hereinbefore prescribed; and also may, with the like advice and assistance, by order, from time to time vary or abolish the fees aforesaid, or any of them, or other the fees for the time being payable in relation to proceedings in lunacy, or any of them, and, if and when it shall seem to him necessary or expedient, fix and impose other fees, or fees of altered amount.

31. The per-centage and the fees for the time being payable under this act shall be collected by means of stamps, which shall be under the management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue; and the provisions of the act of the last session of Parliament [15 & 16 Vict. c. 87] for "the Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery," respecting stamps, and the monies arising from the sale thereof, shall be and are, and every of them is, hereby extended so as to be applicable and applied, mutatis mutandis, to stamps to be used under this act, and the monies arising from the sale thereof.

32. Where it is made to appear to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid that the net amount or net estimated value of the property of a lunatic does not exceed the sum of 700*l.* sterling in respect of the corpus thereof, or the sum of 50*l.* sterling per annum in respect of the income thereof, he may order (if he shall think fit) that no fee shall be taken or paid, or per-centage be levied or paid, in relation to the proceedings in the matter or the property, as from the date of the order or such other time as he shall direct, during the continuance of the lunacy or until further order.

33. All the foregoing provisions respecting fees and per-centage shall be applicable to the proceedings in the matter of, and to the property of, a lunatic under the protection of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid by virtue of proceedings taken under the provisions of the act of the session of Parliament holden in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 95, and also to the proceedings in the matter of, and to the property of, a lunatic under the protection of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid by virtue of the transmission of the record of an inquisition from Ireland, and its entry of record in the Chancery of England, and also to the proceedings in the matter of, and to the property of, a person residing out of England and Wales, and declared idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind according to the laws of the place where he is residing, where the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid makes an order affecting the stock or any portion of the capital stock or shares of such person as last aforesaid, or the dividends thereof; and the aforesaid provisions shall be applied to the several classes of cases mentioned in this present section in such manner and under such regulations as the Lord Chancellor shall, with the advice and assistance aforesaid, from time to time order, but so that no per-centage be levied or paid in either of the two last-mentioned cases, except in respect of income arising from property being within the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, and being administered by him or under his authority and direction.

And whereas the per-centage which is now, under the provisions of the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 36, imposed upon the estates of lunatics, and paid into the Bank of England, in the name and with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to an account intitled "The Account of the Board of Visitors for the better Care and Treatment of Lunatics," will be discontinued under this act: be it therefore further enacted as follows:—

34. Every committee, receiver, or other person who is or shall be liable to pay any money in respect of the per-centage last aforesaid shall, notwithstanding this act, pay the same into the Bank, in the manner now used, either to the account last aforesaid, or, after it has been closed as hereinafter provided, to the said "Suitors' Fee Fund Account," and be allowed the same on passing his accounts before the Masters.

35. All salaries and other sums of money payable out of the monies standing to the credit of "The Account of the Board of Visitors for the better Care and Treatment of Lunatics" shall continue to be payable thereout, until the account shall be closed as hereinafter is provided, and shall be paid thereout accordingly in the manner now used.

36. The last-mentioned account shall be closed on the 3rd December next after the passing of this act, or on such other day as the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance aforesaid, shall order, and the balance which shall then be remaining on the same account shall be carried over to the said "Suitors' Fee Fund Account," under order of the Lord Chancellor.

37. The account of monies received and paid on "The Account of the Board of Visitors for the better Care and Treatment of Lunatics," not previously audited, shall, as soon as may be after the closing of the account, be made out by the secretary to the visitors, and be audited and signed by the Master in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, or other officer to whom the matter of the account shall then stand referred, and shall be afterwards filed with the Registrar in Lunacy, and no fee shall be charged or taken upon, for, or in respect of the auditing or filing thereof.

And with respect to the inquisition, be it further enacted as follows:—

38. Any commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo directed to one person or to two persons, and the inquisition returned thereon, shall be as valid and effectual, to all intents and purposes, as if directed to and returned by more than two persons; and every commission shall (subject to the provision hereinafter contained) be directed to the Masters, or one of them, and may be varied in form from that now in use, in such manner as to the Lord Chancellor may seem necessary or expedient.

39. In lieu of the commission now issued specially in each case of alleged lunacy, a general commission to the like effect, with such variations as may be necessary or expedient, may from time to time be issued in duplicate under the Great Seal, directed to the Masters by name, jointly and severally, who shall by virtue thereof proceed, in each case of alleged lunacy concerning which the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order them to inquire, in like manner and with all the like powers and authorities (subject to the provisions herein-after contained) as if a commission had issued specially in such case, and every inquisition found and returned thereon shall be as valid and effectual, to all intents and purposes, as if the same had been found and returned on a separate commission.

40. Where the alleged lunatic is within the jurisdiction, he shall have notice of the presentation of the petition for inquiry, and may, by a notice signed by him, and attested by his solicitor, and filed with the Registrar, either before the presentation of the petition or within seven days after such notice had by him as aforesaid, or at or within such other time as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order in the particular case, demand an inquiry before a jury.

41. Where the alleged lunatic demands an inquiry before a jury, the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall in his order for inquiry direct the return of a jury, unless he be satisfied, by personal examination of the alleged lunatic, that he is not mentally competent to form and express a wish for an inquiry before a jury; and the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may, where he shall deem it necessary, after presentation of the petition for inquiry, and for the purpose of personal examination, require the alleged lunatic to attend him at such convenient time and place as he may appoint.

42. Where the alleged lunatic does not demand an inquiry before a jury, or the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid is satisfied, by personal examination of him, that he is not mentally competent to form and express a wish in that behalf, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, upon consideration of the evidence adduced before him on the petition for inquiry, and of the circumstances of the case, so far as they are before him, to be unnecessary or inexpedient that the inquiry should be before a jury, and he accordingly does not in his order for inquiry direct the return of a jury, then the Masters shall, by virtue of their general commission, and under such order for inquiry, but without a jury, personally examine the alleged lunatic, and take such evidence, upon oath or otherwise, and call for such information, as they may think fit, or the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may direct, in order to ascertain whether or not the alleged lunatic is of unsound mind, and shall certify their finding thereon.

43. Where the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, under such circumstances as hereinbefore mentioned, does not in his order for inquiry direct the return of a jury, but the Masters acting under the commission, upon consideration of the evidence before them, certify to him that in their opinion an inquiry before a jury is expedient, they shall, without further order, issue their precept to the sheriff, and shall proceed in like manner in all respects, and their proceedings shall be as valid and effectual to all intents and purposes, as if the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid had directed the return of a jury in the first instance.

44. Where the Masters certify that the alleged lunatic is of unsound mind, and incapable of managing himself or his affairs, or that he is of unsound mind, and incapable of managing himself or his affairs, and has been so from a time past, or, on the contrary, certify that the alleged lunatic is of sound mind, and capable of managing himself and his affairs, the certificate shall be and be deemed to be an inquisition, and be of the same force and effect, to all intents and purposes, and be returned, filed, and proceeded on in the same manner in all respects, as an inquisition taken upon the oath of a jury.

45. Where the alleged lunatic is not within the jurisdiction the inquiry shall be before a jury, and no further or other notice shall be necessary to be given to him than he would have been entitled to receive if this act had not been passed.

46. The Lord Chancellor may from time to time, by order, regulate the number of jurors to be sworn, but so that every inquisition upon the oath of a jury be found by the oaths of twelve men at the least.

47. The inquiry, whether with or without a jury, shall, as far as relates to the state of mind of the alleged lunatic, be confined to the question, whether or not the alleged lunatic is of unsound mind, and incapable of managing himself or his affairs, at the time of the inquiry, except where the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, under special circumstances, shall direct that there be also an inquiry from what time the alleged lunatic has been of unsound mind, and incapable of managing himself or his affairs, or shall direct that there be also an inquiry whether or not the alleged lunatic was of unsound mind, and incapable of managing himself and his affairs, at a previous time specified, and thenceforth down to the time of the inquiry.

48. The person executing an inquiry with a jury shall, while so employed, have all the like powers, authorities, and discretion as a judge of a court of record.

49. The foregoing provisions "with respect to the inquisition" shall apply only where the petition for inquiry is presented after the commencement of this act; and every petition for inquiry theretofore presented, and on which an order has not then been made, shall, with respect to the inquisition, be proceeded on as if this act had not been passed.

50. Nothing in this act contained shall be taken to preclude the Lord Chancellor from issuing a commission specially in any case of alleged lunacy, or from issuing a commission directed to any fit person or persons, in addition to the Masters, or one of them, if he shall upon any occasion deem it proper to do so; and the foregoing provisions shall be deemed to extend to every commission so issued specially, or so directed as aforesaid, so far as they may be applicable.

51. Where in any act of Parliament, order or rule of court, or instrument whatsoever, reference is made to a commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo, or the inquisition thereon, the general commission hereby authorised to be issued, and such inquisition, or certificate operating as an inquisition, as is hereby authorised to be made and returned, shall be deemed to be intended by or comprehended in the reference.

52. Where it is desired that an inquisition taken on a commission issued under, or a writ of superseas thereof issued under, the Great Seal of the United Kingdom or under the Great Seal of Ireland respectively, should be acted upon in Ireland or in England respectively, the proper officer may, under order of the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, or the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, as the case may be, transmit a transcript of the record of the inquisition, or of the writ, to the Chancery of Ireland or of England, as the case may be, which transcript shall thereupon be entered and be of record there respectively, and shall, when so entered of record, and if and so long only as the Lord Chancellor of Ireland intrusted as aforesaid, and the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain intrusted as aforesaid, as the case may be, shall see fit, be acted upon by them respectively, and be of the same validity and effect, to all intents and purposes, as if the inquisition had been taken on a commission issued under, or the writ of superseas had been issued under, the Great Seal of Ireland or of the United Kingdom respectively.

And whereas proceedings under commission confer larger and more effectual powers for the due protection, care, and management of the persons and estates of persons of unsound mind than proceedings under the act of the session of Parliament holden in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, ss. 94 to 98, (both inclusive), and the expenses of proceedings under commission will be much diminished by this act: be it therefore further enacted as follows:—

53. It shall not be lawful for the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to direct that one of the Masters shall make such examination as by the 95th section of the last-mentioned act [8 & 9 Vict. c. 100] is authorised in any case in which a petition or a report upon which such direction of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid might be founded shall not have been presented or made before the commencement of this act.

54. Where the Commissioners in Lunacy for the time being shall, after the commencement of this act, by virtue of any authority for the time being enabling them in that behalf, report to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid that they are of opinion that the property of any person alleged to be a lunatic, or detained or taken charge of as a lunatic, but not so found by inquisition, is not duly protected, or that the income thereof is not duly applied for his benefit, or to the same effect, the report shall be filed with the Registrar, and shall be deemed and taken to be tantamount to an ordinary petition for inquiry supported by evidence, and the alleged lunatic shall have notice of the report from such person as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall from time to time direct, and the case shall proceed and be conducted as nearly as may be in all respects as is hereinbefore directed upon the presentation of a petition for inquiry.

And with respect to certain of the proceedings after inquiry, be it further enacted as follows:—

55. The Masters may direct that the evidence in the matter of a lunatic, or on any particular proceeding in the matter, be taken orally, or partly orally and partly by affidavit, and it shall be so taken accordingly.

56. The Masters may, in the matter of a lunatic or alleged lunatic, administer an oath to any witness, whether his deposition or affidavit is to be used before themselves or not, and recognisances may be taken and acknowledged before them.

57. The provisions of the act of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 22, 23, 24, respecting affidavits made in causes or matters depending in the High Court of Chancery, shall be and the same are hereby extended so as to be applicable, mutatis mutandis, to affidavits made in matters in lunacy.

58. Every affidavit to be used in a matter in lunacy shall be taken and expressed in the first person of the deponent, and shall be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively, and respectively confined, as nearly as may be, to distinct portions of the subject-matter.

59. Where an affidavit is required for verifying all or some of the statements contained in a petition, state of facts, proposal, or other document, the affidavit may be annexed or underwritten thereto, and may be in the form set forth in the third schedule hereunder written, with such variations as the circumstances may require; and where the aforesaid form is, in the opinion of the Taxing Master, applicable, no further or greater costs of any affidavit shall be allowed on taxation than would be allowed for an affidavit in the aforesaid form.

60. Every person giving evidence by affidavit shall be liable to oral cross-examination by or before the Masters, in the same manner as if the evidence given by him in his affidavit had been given by him orally before the Masters, and after cross-examination may be re-examined orally by or on behalf of the person filing the affidavit; and every person giving evidence by affidavit shall be bound to attend before the Masters, to be so cross-examined and re-examined, upon receiving due and proper notice, and payment or tender of his reasonable expenses, in like manner as if he had been duly served with a writ of subpoena ad testificandum before an examiner of the High Court of Chancery; and the expenses attending on such cross-examination and re-examination shall be paid in the first instance by the parties respectively, in like manner as if the witness cross-examined were the witness of the party cross-examining, and shall on taxation be ultimately borne and paid by the estate, or the parties respectively, or one of them, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall direct.

61. The Masters shall be at liberty to cause to be issued from time to time such advertisements as may to them seem expedient with reference to the subject-matter of a proposal or inquiry.

62. The Masters shall, instead of her Majesty's Attorney-General, approve, on behalf of her Majesty, of the security to be from time to time given by the committee of the estate, under order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid; and the acts of the Masters with respect to the security and to the grant of the custody shall have the same force and effect to all intents and purposes as the acts of her Majesty's Attorney-General with respect to the same matters now have.

63. In case her Majesty shall think fit to authorise the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to make orders from time to time for the custody of persons already found or who may hereafter be found idiots or lunatics as aforesaid, and of their estates, without requiring that any grant or commitment of such custody should be passed under the Great Seal, then any order to be made by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid in pursuance of such authority shall (as to the custody of the person immediately, and as to the custody of the estate upon the Master's certificate of completion of the committee's security) have the same force and validity as a grant and commitment of the custody of such idiots or lunatics and their estates would have had in case the same had been made under the Great Seal, by virtue of any authority for that purpose given by her Majesty to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, and the provisions of this act respecting the grant shall be deemed to extend to any order to be made as aforesaid.

64. Where it is desired and the Masters allow that the approved committee of the estate should, in lieu of giving security in the manner now usual, by bond or recognisance with sureties, give security, in the whole or in part, by bringing into court an adequate sum of money or stock, the Masters may by certificate direct or give liberty for the payment into the Bank of England, with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the credit of the matter of the lunatic, of any sum of money, or the transfer into the name and with the privity of the said Accountant-General, in trust in the matter of the lunatic, of any sum of stock, and may specify the account to which the sum of money or stock is to be placed, and may direct how any money is to be invested, or how any dividends are to be applied, and such payment, transfer, investment, and application, as the case may require, shall be made by virtue of such certificate, and the said Accountant-General shall declare the trust of the sum of money or stock when so paid or transferred accordingly, subject to the order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid.

65. Where it appears expedient, either with a view to the reduction of the amount of the security of the committee of the estate, or for any other reason, the Masters may without order receive or deliver out any deed or security belonging to the lunatic, and may by certificate direct or give liberty for the payment into the Bank of England, with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the credit of the matter of the lunatic, of any sum of money belonging to the lunatic, or the transfer into the name and with the privity of the said Accountant-General, in trust in the matter of the lunatic, of any sum of stock belonging to the lunatic, and such payment or transfer, as the case may require, shall be made by virtue of such certificate, and the said Accountant-General shall declare the trust of the sum of money or stock when so paid or transferred accordingly, subject to the order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid.

66. Where the Masters find and report that several persons are the most fit persons to be appointed the committees of the estate or of the person, and they are of opinion that it is expedient that one or more of the same several persons should continue to be the committee or committees after the death or discharge of the others or other of them, and such persons are willing so to continue, the Masters may report accordingly; and where the report is confirmed, the approved committees of the estate may perfect their securities in such form as to extend to the acts and defaults of one or more of them, in accordance with the report, and thereupon the grant of the custody of the estate or of the person (as the case may be) shall be made conformably with the order of custody; and the continuing or surviving committee or committees to whom separately the grant extends shall and may continue until further order to act after the death or discharge of the others or other of them, with all the like powers, authorities, and discretions, and subject to all the like liabilities as the original committees.

67. The Masters' allowance of the account of a committee or receiver shall be signified under their hands, and be written under the account, but no certificate shall be made, except where it may be specially required with a view to payment of money into court, or for some other purpose.

68. Where the Masters are of opinion that any small expenses included in the committee's or receiver's account have been properly and reasonably incurred for the benefit or enjoyment of the lunatic, or the improvement, security, or advantage of his estate, and there is no opposition to the allowance thereof, but it may not be competent to them to allow the same to the committee or receiver without the sanction of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, they shall distinguish the items by some mark in their allowance of the account, which shall be made subject to the approval of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, and the account as passed by the Masters shall be submitted by them to the Lord Chancellor, without petition, for his allowance or disallowance in respect of the items so distinguished by them.

69. The Masters shall be at liberty, without an order of reference, to receive any proposal and conduct any inquiry respecting the managing, repairing, setting, or letting of the estate, and to report thereon.

70. The Masters shall also be at liberty, without an order of reference, to receive any proposal and conduct any inquiry relating to the estate, not respecting the managing, repairing, setting, or letting thereof, and any proposal or inquiry whatsoever relating to the person, and to report thereon respectively, if and when they shall be of opinion that if application were made to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, concerning the matter of any such proposal or inquiry, a reference thereon would be made to the Masters.

71. Where the Masters, without an order of reference, receive any proposal, or proceed in any inquiry relating to the estate, not respecting the managing, repairing, setting, or letting thereof, or any proposal or inquiry whatsoever respecting the person, any person attending before them shall be at liberty to apply by petition to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, as he may be advised; and thereupon the Masters shall, pending the application, cease from proceeding on the proposal or in the inquiry, unless the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid otherwise direct.

72. Where the Masters, without an order of reference, receive and proceed on a proposal or conduct an inquiry, but arrive at the opinion that the proposal ought not to be adopted and carried into effect, or that the inquiry was unnecessary, they shall be at liberty to certify whether or not, regard being had to the circumstances, the proposal or inquiry was proper to be made; and if they certify in the affirmative, usual and proper costs of the proposal or inquiry and proceedings thereon shall be allowed, on taxation, by virtue of their certificate, but if they certify in the negative, the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall direct by whom and in what manner the costs shall be paid and borne.

73. Where any person requires that the Masters should report on a proposal which they have received and proceeded on without an order of reference, notwithstanding their opinion that it should not be adopted and carried into effect, the Masters shall report on the proposal, and the report shall be brought before the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid by petition, who shall make such order upon the report and respecting the costs as to him shall under the circumstances seem just.

74. Where an application is made by petition to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, either concerning a matter which might have been brought before the Masters in the first instance, or in consequence of the Masters receiving any proposal or proceeding in any inquiry relating to the estate or the person, the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may make such order respecting the costs of the application and of the consequent proceedings as to him shall under the circumstances seem just.

75. Subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, the Masters shall, as soon as may be after the return of the inquiry, and may afterwards from time to time as they may think it expedient, inquire and certify who are the next of kin, and, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, due notice of attending on the proceedings in the matter shall be given to the persons for the time being found to be the next of kin.

76. Where the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, by virtue of the power hereinbefore given, exempts the property of a lunatic from payment of fees and per-centage, the Masters shall not during the continuance of the exemption inquire respecting his next of kin, without special order.

77. The Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may in any case by order defer an inquiry respecting next of kin, or direct that the inquiry shall be carried on to such limited extent only, and under such restrictions and provisions, and in such manner, as he may under the circumstances of the case think expedient, and may, where he deems it just and expedient, order that persons alleging themselves to be next of kin be left to make out their claim at their own expense, and may in any case, if from the smallness of the property of the lunatic (although it be not such as to entitle it to exemption from payment of fees and per-centage) he think it safe and just, by order wholly dispense with the inquiry.

78. Where the Masters are of opinion that by reason of the smallness of the property of a lunatic, or for any other reason, an inquiry or a subsequent inquiry (as the case may be) respecting next of kin should be dispensed with or deferred, or be carried on to a limited extent only, they shall report accordingly.

79. Where the Masters, in conducting an inquiry respecting next of kin, without any special direction of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid concerning the mode of conducting the same, are of opinion that the circumstances of the case render it expedient and safe that strict proof of pedigree should not be gone into, they may dispense with the same to such extent and in such manner as may to them seem expedient, and may require and receive such evidence as may appear to them sufficient and satisfactory respecting the family and the next of kin, and shall certify the mode in which they have conducted the inquiry.

80. The Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may, by order, dispense with and disallow the attendance on the proceedings in the matter of all or some of the next of kin, either wholly, or except at their own expense, or except upon special leave first obtained, as he shall under the circumstances think expedient; and such notice only of attending on the proceedings shall be given as shall be conformable with the order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid.

81. Subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, the Masters shall once in the matter of each lunatic, and may afterwards from time to time, as they think it expedient, determine whether any one or more, and if any, how many and which, of the next of kin is or are to attend on the proceedings or on any particular proceeding before them in the matter, (but exclusively, as at present, of the heir-at-law, with respect to notice of or attendance on the committee of the estate), and the person or persons alone (if any) to whom the Masters have given liberty to attend shall be entitled to notice of or shall be allowed to attend, at the cost of the estate, on any proceeding or on such particular proceeding as aforesaid, (as the case may be), before the Masters, except upon their special leave first obtained; and the same person or persons alone (if any) to whom the Masters have given liberty to attend on the proceedings before them in the matter generally shall be entitled to notice of or shall be allowed to attend, at the cost of the estate, on any proceeding before the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, except upon his special leave first obtained, and for that purpose the Masters shall from time to time, as occasion may require, certify who is or are the person or persons (if any) to whom they have given liberty to attend on the proceedings before them in the matter generally.

82. Where an infant, being one of the next of kin, and being at liberty to attend on the proceedings, has no guardian, the Masters may from time to time, by certificate, appoint a fit person to be his guardian for the purposes of the lunacy, who shall thereupon, for the purposes of the lunacy only, and not further or otherwise, have all the same powers, authorities, and discretion as if he had been duly constituted guardian by the Court of Chancery; and the Masters may from time to time, by certificate, revoke any such appointment, and appoint another fit person to be the guardian, toties quoties.

83. The Masters may, where it seems expedient, consolidate or carry on together similar proceedings before them in the matters of several persons being members of the same family, and may in that case, and also where it does not seem expedient that the proceedings should be consolidated or carried on together, use in the matter of one member of a family evidence filed or taken in the matter of another member or other members of the same family, when and so far as it may be applicable.

84. The Masters may, on being satisfied of a lunatic's death, without order, open and read any paper writing deposited with them, and purporting or alleged to be his will, for the purpose of ascertaining who is therein nominated executor thereof, and also whether or not there is any and what direction therein contained concerning his funeral or place of interment, and then deliver the same to the Registrar or other proper officer of the Prerogative or other proper Ecclesiastical Court, to the intent that the same may be exhibited in the usual course, and dealt with according to law, and shall certify the death and the opening and delivering out of the paper writing accordingly.

85. The Masters shall be at liberty, without order of reference, to inquire and report whether or not any person residing out of England and Wales, and where, has been declared idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, and whether or not his personal estate, or some and what part thereof, has been vested in a curator or other and what person appointed for the management thereof, according to the laws of the place where the person is residing, and whether or not any and what stock, portion of the capital stock, or share of any and what company or society, is standing in the name of or is vested in that person, and what is his interest therein.

86. Subject to the provisions of this act, and to the general orders in lunacy for the time being in force, and to any order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, the Masters may, if they think fit, dispense with any summons ordinarily taken out in the course of the proceedings before them, and direct and require any party attending before them to take out a summons for a particular purpose or within a particular time, and fix the time at which any particular summons shall be returnable before them, or at or within which any proceeding necessary or proper to be taken before them shall be taken, and may proceed de die in diem or adjourn the proceedings before them, as they may see fit.

87. The Masters shall from time to time inquire into the circumstances of any delay in the conduct of proceedings before them, or in proceeding upon their reports, certificates, or decisions, and for that purpose may call before them all parties concerned, and may report accordingly, where it seems expedient.

88. The Masters may by certificate disallow, wholly or in part, the costs of any proceeding or document taken or used, or proposed to be taken or used, before them; and the costs of the attendance of counsel before them shall not be allowed on taxation, unless they certify that such attendance was proper, and for the security or advantage of the lunatic or his estate.

89. The affidavits, petitions, and other documents brought into the offices of the Masters or Registrar shall not contain unnecessary recitals or statements of proceedings or documents previously taken or used in the matter; and the Taxing Masters shall look into all such affidavits, petitions, and other documents as aforesaid, and deal in such manner as to them seems just with the costs of any affidavit, petition, or other document appearing to them to be unnecessary or improper, in the whole or in part, or of unnecessary length.

90. The Masters shall be at liberty to report specially to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid any decision at which they may arrive, or any other matter relating to any inquiry or proposal pending before or under consideration by them, in order to obtain a decision or direction by or from him for their guidance in the further prosecution of the inquiry or consideration of the proposal.

91. The Masters' reports shall be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively, and respectively confined, as nearly as may be, to distinct portions of the subject-matter, and with such appropriate headings prefixed to all or any of the paragraphs as may be convenient.

92. The reports of the Masters, whether confirmed by fiat or not, under the provisions hereinafter contained, and their certificates, and all other reports and certificates made in matters in lunacy, (except the reports of the visitors hereinafter provided for), shall be left by the Masters, Taxing Masters, and other officers making the same respectively, with the Registrar in Lunacy, by whom the same shall be filed, and it shall not be necessary that they, or any of them, should be filed elsewhere; and the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, and all other persons, and the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, shall, as occasion may require, set upon or in relation to any report, and the fiat thereon, (if any), or any certificate so filed, in like manner as if the report or certificate had been filed also in the Report-office of the Court of Chancery, according to the practice formerly used.

93. Any person objecting to a draft report of the Masters, and desiring to prosecute the objection, shall bring in before the Masters a statement of objections in writing, and thereupon the Masters shall be at liberty to review the draft objected to; and after review, or the refusal of the Masters to review, the person objecting may bring in before the Masters a notice in writing, stating that he insists on the objections, or any one or more of them; and all the objections not so insisted on shall be considered as abandoned.

94. No person shall, except upon special leave of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid first obtained, present a petition against the confirmation of a report, but in every case, on the hearing of the petition for confirmation of the report, any objections insisted on as aforesaid may be brought forward in opposition to the confirmation of the report, without any exceptions or cross petition.

95. Where no statement of objections is brought in, or all the objections contained in a statement brought in are abandoned, the report shall be submitted to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid for confirmation, without petition, and without the attendance of parties, except where, from the special nature or circumstances of the case, the Masters are of opinion that the report ought to be brought before the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid by petition, and by indorsement on the report under their hands shall so direct accordingly.

96. Where a report is to be submitted for confirmation without petition, it shall contain the directions consequential on the confirmation thereof, and the fiat of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid on the report shall give it the operation of an order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid made upon petition, subject to such other directions and provisions (if any) as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may think fit.

97. The reports of the Masters shall be brought before the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid for confirmation, by petition, in each of the cases following:—

1. Where the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, on referring a matter to the Masters to inquire and report, so directs;
2. Where a statement of objections is brought in, and all the objections are not abandoned;
3. Where the Masters, having regard to the special nature or circumstances of the case, as hereinbefore provided, so direct;
4. Where no order is made on the report being submitted for confirmation without petition;

And in such other cases as are herein mentioned, and as the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance aforesaid, shall from time to time by general order direct.

And with respect to orders in lunacy, be it further enacted as follows:—

98. Every petition shall be filed before an order thereon shall be passed, and the order shall not recite any part of the statements contained in the petition, and only such part (if any) of the prayer as may be necessary; and an order shall not state any part of a report, except the Masters' conclusion or opinion, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance aforesaid, may and shall from time to time make such general orders as to him shall seem meet for embodying (as far as may be) such provisions and directions as are now commonly or frequently inserted in orders, and are not provided for by this act, and for dispensing (as far as may be) with the formal parts of orders as now drawn up.

99. Every order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, in a matter in lunacy, shall be communicated by the Registrar to the Masters, whether any matter is thereby referred to them or not.

100. Every order made in a matter in lunacy by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, when drawn up by the Registrar in Lunacy, and signed by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, shall be entered by the Registrar in Lunacy in a proper book to be provided by him for that purpose, and he shall furnish office copies of any order or of any report, confirmed by fiat, or of any part thereof respectively, signed by him, and sealed or stamped with the seal of his office, to every party in the matter, or other person entitled thereto, who shall require the same; and every office copy of the whole of an order or report confirmed as aforesaid, purporting to be so signed and sealed, or stamped with such seal, shall at all times, and on behalf of all persons, and whether for the purposes of this act or otherwise, be admitted as evidence of the order or report confirmed as aforesaid, of which it purports to be a copy, without any further proof thereof.

101. Where an order or a report confirmed by fiat relates to the payment, transfer, carrying over, or depositing of any cash, stocks, funds, annuities, securities, or other effects, to or into the name of or in the custody of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the credit of the matter of a lunatic, or to the payment, transfer, or carrying over or other disposal by the said Accountant-General of any cash, stocks, funds, annuities, securities, or other effects standing in his name or deposited in his custody to the credit of the matter of a lunatic, or of any cash, stocks, funds, annuities, securities, or other effects to or in which a lunatic is entitled or benespecially interested, and which are not standing in trust in a cause or matter depending in the Court of Chancery, the said Accountant-General, and all other persons, and the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, shall act upon the order signed by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, after the same has been entered as hereinbefore provided, or upon an office copy of the report confirmed by fiat, and thence receiving the operation of an order after the same has been filed as hereinbefore provided, in the same manner as if an order had been drawn up by the Registrar of the Court of Chancery, and passed and entered in the Court of Chancery according to the practice formerly used; and the Registrar in Lunacy in case of an order, and the Masters in case of a report confirmed by fiat, shall certify under their hands respectively to the said Accountant-General what stocks, funds, annuities, securities, or other effects are, by virtue of any such order or report confirmed as aforesaid, (as the case may be), to be sold, transferred, or delivered out, in the same manner as the Registrars of the Court of Chancery were formerly accustomed to do.

102. If any person shall forge the signature of the Registrar in Lunacy, or shall forge or counterfeit the seal of his office, or knowingly concur in using any such forged or counterfeited signature or seal, or shall tender in evidence any document with a false or counterfeit signature of such Registrar, or with a false or counterfeit seal, knowing the same signature or seal to be false or counterfeit, every such person shall be guilty of felony, and shall be liable to the same punishment as any offender under an act of the session of Parliament holden in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113.

103. The foregoing provisions, "with respect to certain of the proceedings after inquisition," and "with respect to orders," shall be applicable and applied, as far as may be, to the proceedings in the matters of lunatics under the protection of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, by virtue of proceedings taken under the act of the session of Parliament holden in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 95.

And with respect to the visiting of lunatics, be it further enacted as follows:—

104. Each lunatic shall be personally visited and seen by one at the least of the visitors, according to the provisions of the next following section, once at the least in each year, or oftener, and at such times as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may direct, or, in the absence of his directions, as the Board of Visitors may think expedient.

105. The medical visitors shall continue to visit lunatics as at present, and the legal visitors to be appointed after the commencement of this act shall also respectively visit lunatics; and the visits of the several visitors shall be from time to time regulated as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may direct, or, in the absence of his directions, as the Board of Visitors may deem necessary or advisable, in such manner that, as far as circumstances will admit, every lunatic may from time to time and in due succession be visited by the legal visitor, either alone or in company with one of the medical visitors.

106. The visitors shall respectively, within a convenient time after each visit, make a report in writing to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid of the state of mind and bodily health, and of the general condition, and also of the care and treatment of each person visited and seen by them respectively, which reports shall, annually or oftener, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may direct, or the Board of Visitors may think expedient, be submitted to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid; and the visitors respectively shall make separate or special reports on any case to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, as and when they or the Board of Visitors may think expedient, and in particular shall report to him, without delay, any instance in which they respectively, on proceeding to visit, have been unable to discover the then residence of, or have been by any other circumstance prevented from actually seeing on that occasion, the lunatic whom they intended to visit.

107. The reports of the visitors shall be filed and kept secret in their office, and shall be open to the inspection of no person, save the members of the Board of Visitors, their secretary and his clerk, and the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, and such persons as he may specially appoint; and all the reports relating to any particular patient shall be destroyed on the death of the patient, and shall also be destroyed on the inquisition in his case being superseded, or being vacated and discharged on a traverse, unless the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, within fourteen days after the supersedeas, or the vacating and discharge on a traverse, specially order that the same be not destroyed until the death.

And with respect to the management and administration of the estates of lunatics, be it further enacted as follows:—

108. Where a lunatic is entitled to be admitted tenant of copyhold land, the committee of his estate may appear at one of the three next courts holden for the manor, (for the holding whereof the usual notice shall be given), and there offer himself to be admitted tenant in the name and on behalf of the lunatic; and in default of his appearance, or of his acceptance of admittance, the lord or his steward may, after three courts duly holden, and proclamations thereat regularly made, at any subsequent court appoint any fit person to be attorney for the lunatic for that purpose only, and by that attorney admit the lunatic tenant of the land, according to such estate as the lunatic shall be legally entitled to therein.

109. The lord or his steward may upon the admittance impose such fine as might have been legally imposed if the lunatic had been of sound mind, which fine may be demanded by the lord's bailiff or agent, by a note in writing signed by the lord or his steward, to be left with the committee of the estate, or with the tenant or occupier of the land.

110. If the fine be not paid or tendered to the lord or his steward within three months after demand, then the lord may enter upon and hold the land, and receive the rents and profits thereof, (but without liberty to fell any timber standing thereon), until he be thereby fully paid the fine, with his reasonable costs and charges of raising the same, and of obtaining the possession of the land, although the lunatic die before the fine and costs and charges have been raised; of which rents and profits received by the lord, his steward, bailiff, or servant, the lord shall yearly, on demand by the person entitled to the surplus thereof, after payment of the fine and costs and charges, or by the person then entitled to the land, render a just and true account, and shall pay the same surplus, if any, to the person entitled thereto; and as soon as the fine and costs and charges have been fully paid, or if, after the lord's entry, the fine and costs and charges be lawfully tendered to him, then the lunatic, by the committee of his estate or other the person entitled, may enter upon and hold the land, according to his estate or interest therein; and the lord shall deliver possession thereof accordingly, and if he refuse so to do, he shall make satisfaction to the person kept out of possession for all the damages which he shall thereby sustain, and all his costs and charges of recovering possession.

111. If the committee pay the fine and costs and charges, then he, his executors and administrators, may enter upon and hold the land, and receive the rents and profits thereof to his and their own use, until he and they be thereby fully paid the amount disbursed upon that account, although the lunatic die before his and their reimbursement.

112. If the fine imposed be not warranted by the custom of the manor, or be unlawful, the lunatic may controvert its legality, as if this act had not been made; and no lunatic shall forfeit any land for his neglect or refusal to appear at any court, or to be admitted thereto, or to pay the fine imposed upon his admittance.

113. Where a lunatic is entitled to a lease for a life or lives or for a term of years, either absolute or determinable on a death, or otherwise, the committee of his estate may, in his name and on his behalf, under an order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, by deed surrender the lease, and in the name and on behalf and for the benefit of the lunatic accept a new lease of the premises comprised in the lease surrendered, for such number of lives, or for such term of years, either absolute or determinable as aforesaid, as was mentioned or contained in the lease surrendered at the making thereof, or otherwise as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

114. Every sum of money and other consideration paid by a committee or other person, in the nature of or as a fine, premium, or income upon renewal, and all reasonable charges incident thereto, may be paid out of the lunatic's estate, or may, with interest, be a charge upon the leasehold premises, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

115. Every lease renewed shall operate and be to the same uses, and be liable to the same trusts, charges, incumbrances, dispositions, devises, and conditions, as the lease surrendered was subject to, or would have been subject to if the surrender had not been made.

116. Where it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be just and reasonable, or for the lunatic's benefit, he may order that any estate or interest of the lunatic in land or stock, either in possession, reversion, remainder, contingency, or expectancy, be sold, or charged by way of mortgage, or otherwise disposed of as may to him seem most expedient, for the purpose of raising money to be applied, and may accordingly order that the money when raised be applied, for or towards all or any of the purposes following:—

1. The payment of the lunatic's debts or engagements;
2. The discharge of any incumbrance on his estates;
3. The payment of any debt or expenditure incurred or made after requisition, or authorised by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be incurred or made for the lunatic's maintenance, or otherwise for his benefit;
4. The payment of or provision for the expenses of his future maintenance;
5. The payment of the costs of applying for, obtaining, and executing the inquiry, and of opposing the same;
6. The payment of the costs of any proceeding under or consequent on the requisition, or incurred under order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid; and,
7. The payment of the costs of any such sale, mortgage, charge, or other disposition as is hereby authorised to be made:

And the committee of the estate may and shall, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, execute, make, and do all such conveyances, deeds, transfers, and things relative to any such sale, mortgage, charge, or other disposition as aforesaid, and for effectuating this present provision, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

117. In case of a charge or mortgage being made under this act upon an interest in contingency, or in reversion, remainder, or expectancy, for the expenses of future maintenance, the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may direct the same to be payable and paid, either contingently, if the interest charged be a contingent one, or upon the happening of the event, if the interest be depending on an event which must happen, and either in a gross sum or in annual or other periodical sums, and at such times, in such manner, and either with or without interest, as he shall deem expedient; and any charge already made, which would have been valid if made after this act, shall be and is hereby declared to be valid.

118. Where it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be for the lunatic's benefit, he may order that the whole or any part of any monies expended or to be expended under his order, for the permanent improvement, security, or advantage of the land of the lunatic, or of any particular part thereof, shall, with interest, be a charge upon and be raiseable out of the lunatic's estate and interest in the land or such particular part thereof as aforesaid, but so that no right of sale or foreclosure during the lifetime of the lunatic be given or acquired under or by virtue of the charge; and the interest shall be kept down, during the lunatic's lifetime, out of the income of his general estate, as far as the same shall be sufficient to bear it; and the committee of the estate may and shall, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, execute and do all such conveyances and things for effectuating this present provision as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order; and such charge may be made either to some person advancing the money, or, if the money is paid out of the lunatic's general property, to some person as a trustee for him, as part of his personal estate.

119. On any monies being raised by sale, mortgage, charge, or other disposition of land made in pursuance of any of the foregoing provisions, the person whose estate is sold, mortgaged, charged, or otherwise disposed of, and his heirs, next of kin, devisees, legatees, executors, administrators, and assigns, shall have such and the like interest in the surplus monies remaining after the purposes for which the monies have been raised shall have been answered as he or they would have had in the estate if no sale, mortgage, charge, or other disposition thereof had been made, and the surplus monies shall be of the same nature and character as the estate sold, mortgaged, charged, or otherwise disposed of; and the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may make such orders, and direct such conveyances, deeds, and things to be executed and done, (which may and shall accordingly be executed and done), as may be necessary for the effectuating this present provision, and for the due application of the surplus monies.

120. Where it is made to appear to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid that the net amount or net estimated value of the property of a lunatic does not exceed the sum of 500*l.* sterling, and it appears to him, having regard to the situation and condition in life of the lunatic and his family, and the other circumstances of the case, to be expedient that the amount or value of his property should be made available for his maintenance in a direct and inexpensive manner, and that the same can be safely and properly done, he may, instead of proceeding to order a grant of the custody of the estate, order or allow that the amount of the property, if in money or stock, or if of any other description the produce thereof when realised, be paid or transferred to such relative of the lunatic, or such other person as he may think proper to intrust with the application thereof, to be by him applied in or towards the maintenance of the lunatic, either at his discretion, or in such manner and subject to such control as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may direct; and for the purpose of giving effect to any such order, the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may order any small real estate or other property of the lunatic to be sold, and a valid conveyance or transfer thereof to be executed or made by such person as he shall direct.

LONDON, OCTOBER 1, 1853.

THERE is in London a society having for its object the repeal of the law which forbids the marriage of a widower with his deceased wife's sister, and of a widow with the brother of her deceased husband. If that society confined its operations to exertions in favour of the repeal of the law we should not meddle with it. The subject is one rather of religion and policy than of law, and one on which men may very conscientiously differ.

On the religious part of the question, not only devout and well-instructed laymen, but learned ecclesiastics, do differ toto cœlo. So, on the question of policy, whether it is for the comfort and well-being of society that such marriages should be allowed, arguments of all kinds are used; statistical information is carefully collected, and carefully and earnestly diffused; and the result is, that many excellent people are as thoroughly convinced that the capacity to marry a deceased wife's sister is essential to the happiness of society, as others are that it is quite inimical to family happiness. In that state of opinion and things, though we hold ourselves as free to discuss the question as the society, or as anybody else, yet if this society had confined itself to advocating and assisting in the repeal of the law, we should not think it any part of our business to impugn the propriety of its proceedings. But when it proceeds, as it does, by periodical advertisements, to inform the public that such marriages are lawful at various places on the continent, and to follow up that statement by another, that Lord Stowell has laid it down that by the law of England a marriage lawfully celebrated abroad is recognised as lawful in England—the doctrine thus imputed to Lord Stowell being broadly and nakedly stated, without comment, qualification, or explanation—then we say that this society is doing infinite mischief, because it is, in ignorance we must hope, deluding the people of England into a belief that they may, by going abroad, contract a marriage which will be treated as lawful in England; whereas, if it is not quite certain that the law is the other way, there is at least such grave doubt whether such a marriage can in any mode whatever be rendered lawful in England, that no lawyer would at this day advise his clients to rely on its validity, wherever or however contracted.

The doctrine of Lord Stowell, and of every other judge who has ever sat since his time—a doctrine so well understood, that one would have thought it needed hardly to have been paraded in a public advertisement as if it were a discovery—is this, that although the law of England requires itself certain forms and ceremonials for the contraction of a valid marriage in England, yet, upon general principles of the convenience of mankind, it will treat as lawful in England a marriage contracted abroad without those ceremonials, if the marriage has been contracted in the form recognised by the law of the foreign State. But Lord Stowell never said, nor has any other judge ever decided or said, that where the law of England imposes a personal incapacity for marriage on particular persons, or, in other words, makes a marriage in England impossible with any ceremonial, it will recognise as valid a marriage contracted between such persons in a country whose laws permit it; nor is it very likely, in our opinion at least, that any Court ever will so decide. The exception allowed by the law in favour of marriages celebrated under forms insufficient by the law of England, is founded upon reasonings not at all applicable to marriages between persons incapacitated by the law of England. In the former case, the forms or ceremonial—the requisite acts to be done to bind parties in marriage—are matters precautionary—executive, as it were; not matters affecting the principle on which marriages are authorised, but simply the due performance of a contract in itself not unlawful. Those are matters on which there may well be, and in fact are, so many different views of convenience taken by different States agreeing in their views of the lawfulness of the contract, that for a country trading in every other country under the sun, having its own children scattered all over the world, and its own cities and provinces filled with the children of other countries, it does not need argument to shew, that if the law did not make the exception that it does, the most grievously inconvenient consequences would follow. But in making the exception the law sacrifices no principle; it merely waives its own forms in favour of foreign forms, for the general convenience of mankind. But when the law of a country forbids altogether certain marriages—when it renders certain persons incapable of marrying—it does so upon some principle, religious or political. It may be wrong in its view of what is the right principle, but still the question is one of a principle; and it would be strange if the law of any country should on such a question allow itself to be overridden and nullified by the law of a foreign country.

Our own opinion, which we have expressed more than once in THE JURIST, is, that by no possible means, whether by marrying abroad or otherwise, can a marriage within the prohibited degrees referred to in the act of 1835 be made valid in England. But whether we are right in that or not, thus much is at least certain, that it has never yet been decided that such a marriage celebrated at Altona, or elsewhere where it is lawful, will be held lawful in England; that, looking at the language of the statute, he must indeed be a confident man who will give a clear opinion that it can be evaded by a foreign marriage; that Lord Stowell's doctrine applies to a totally different class of cases, and does not touch cases under Lord Lyndhurst's Act; and finally, that the assertion of such a doctrine in the way it is put forth by the society is calculated to mislead people into the notion, that by going abroad they may contract, with a certain of validity, marriages, the validity of which is, at least, open to the greatest possible doubt.

PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES.

121. Where it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, upon a report of the Masters, that there is reason to believe that the unsoundness of mind of any lunatic so found by inquisition is in its nature temporary, and will probably be soon removed, and that it is expedient that temporary provision should be made for the maintenance of the lunatic, or of the lunatic and the members of his immediate family who are dependent upon him for maintenance, and that any sum of money arising from or being in the nature of income or of ready money belonging to the lunatic, and standing to his account with a banker or agent, or being in the hands of any person for his use, is readily available and may be safely and properly applied in that behalf, the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may allow thereout such amount as he may think proper for the temporary maintenance of the lunatic, or of the lunatic and the members of his immediate family who are dependent upon him for maintenance, and may, instead of proceeding to order a grant of the custody of the estate, order or give liberty for the payment of any such sum of money as aforesaid, or any part thereof, to such person as he may, under the circumstances of the case, think proper to intrust with the application thereof, and may direct the same to be paid to such person accordingly, and when received, to be applied, and the same shall accordingly be applied, in or towards such temporary maintenance as aforesaid; and the receipts in writing of the person named in the order to whom payment is to be made for any monies payable to him by virtue thereof shall effectually discharge the banker, agent, or other person paying the same from the monies therein respectively expressed to be received, and they respectively are hereby directed to act upon and obey every such order; and the person so receiving any monies by virtue of this present provision shall pass an account thereof before the Masters, when required.

122. Where a person, having contracted to sell, mortgage, let, divide, exchange, or otherwise dispose of any land, afterwards becomes lunatic, and the contract is not disputed, and is such as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid thinks ought to be performed, or a specific performance of the contract, either wholly or so far as the same remains to be performed, has been decreed or ordered by the Court of Chancery, either before or after the lunacy, the committee of the estate may, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under an order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, on the application of the party claiming the benefit of the contract with the lunatic, or any plaintiff in the suit, receive and give an effectual discharge for the money payable to the lunatic, or so much thereof as remains unpaid, and make such conveyance of the land to such person and in such manner as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may order.

123. Where a person, being a member of a copartnership firm, becomes lunatic, the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may, by order made on the application of the partner or partners of the lunatic, or of such other person or persons as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall think entitled to require the same, dissolve the partnership; and thereupon, or upon a dissolution of the partnership by decree of the Court of Chancery, or otherwise by due course of law, the committee of the estate, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, may join and concur with such other person or persons in disposing of the partnership property, as well real as personal, to such persons, upon such terms, and in such manner, and may and shall execute and do such conveyances and things for effectuating this present provision, and apply the monies payable to the lunatic in respect of his share and interest in the copartnership, in such manner as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

124. Where a lunatic is seized of or entitled to an undivided share of land, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be for his benefit and to be expedient that a sale of the land, or part thereof, or a partition of the land, should be made, and where a lunatic is seized of or entitled to land, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be for his benefit and to be expedient that an exchange thereof, or of part thereof, for other land, should be made, the committee of the estate, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under an order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, may concur with such other person in making such sale or partition, or may make such exchange, and receive such monies payable on the sale, and give or receive such monies for equality of partition or exchange, or otherwise in relation thereto, as the order may direct; and all monies received by the committee of the estate upon any such sale, partition, or exchange as aforesaid shall be applied and disposed of in manner directed in sect. 135 of this act respecting the fines, premiums, and sums of money therein mentioned; and the land taken in exchange shall be held and assured (as nearly as may be) to the same uses, and upon the same trusts, and subject to the same powers and provisions, (if any), to, upon, and subject to which the land given in exchange was held; and the committee of the estate may and shall, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, execute and do all such conveyances and things for effectuating this present provision as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

125. Where a lunatic is seised of or entitled to land in fee-simple, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be for his benefit that the same or any part thereof should be made available for building purposes, and that to that end the same should, in lieu of being demised for long terms of years, be absolutely sold, he may order the same to be sold accordingly, to such persons, in such quantities, upon such terms, and in such manner as to him may seem expedient, and the monies arising thereby shall be applied and disposed of in manner directed in sect. 132 of this act respecting the surplus monies therein mentioned; and the committee of the estate may and shall, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, execute and do all such conveyances and things for effectuating this present provision as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

126. Where a lunatic has been engaged in a trade or business, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be for the benefit of the lunatic or his estate that the business premises should be disposed of, the committee of the estate may, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, make such conveyance of the messuages, buildings, or hereditaments of or belonging to the trade or business, or used in connexion therewith, according to the lunatic's estate and interest in the same, to such person, and shall apply the monies arising thereby in such manner, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

127. Where a lunatic is entitled to a lease for a life or lives or for a term of years, either absolute or determinable on a death or otherwise, or to an underlease, of whatsoever nature, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be desirable and for the benefit of the lunatic or his estate that the lease or underlease should be disposed of, the committee of the estate may, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, surrender, assign, or otherwise dispose of the lease or underlease, to such person, for such valuable or nominal or other consideration, upon such terms, by such conveyances, and in such manner, and shall apply the monies (if any) arising thereby in such manner, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

128. The committee of the estate of a lunatic may, with the approbation of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, signified by order on the application of the committee, enter into any agreement for or on behalf of the lunatic which the guardian of an infant might have entered into for or on behalf of the infant by virtue of the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 1 Geo. 1, c. 10, if so much of that act as related to agreements of guardians for or on behalf of infants or idiots under their guardianship had not been repealed by the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 25.

129. Where a lunatic is seised or possessed of or entitled to land in fee or in tail, or to leasehold land for an absolute interest, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be for his benefit that a lease or underlease should be made thereof for terms of years, for encouraging the erection of buildings thereon, or for repairing buildings actually being thereon, or otherwise improving the same, or for farming or other purposes, the committee of the estate may, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, make such lease of the land or any part thereof, according to the lunatic's estate and interest therein, and to the nature of the tenure thereof, for such term or terms of years, and subject to such rents and covenants, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

130. Where a lunatic is seised or possessed of or entitled to land in fee or in tail, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be for his benefit that any mine or quarry already opened in, upon, or under the land should be worked, the committee of the estate may, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, make such lease of the mines, quarries, minerals, stones, and substances, in, upon, or under the land, either with or without any land convenient to be held therewith, and with or without the surface, to such person, for such term or terms of years, and subject to such rents, royalties, reservations, covenants, and agreements, in such manner and form, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

131. Where a lunatic is seised or possessed of or entitled to land in fee or in tail, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid either to be necessary for the maintenance of the lunatic and the members of his immediate family for whom provision is directed to be made, or to be expedient in a due course of management, that any mine or quarry, being in, upon, or under the land, should be opened and worked, the committee of the estate may, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, make such lease of the mines, quarries, minerals, stones, and substances in, upon, or under the land, although not already opened or worked, and either with or without any land convenient to be held therewith, and with or without the surface, to such person, for such term or terms of years, and subject to such rents, royalties, reservations, covenants, and agreements, and in such manner and form, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order.

132. Where the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid makes any such order as in and by the last preceding section is authorised to be made, by reason of its appearing to him to be necessary for the maintenance of the lunatic and such members of his immediate family as aforesaid that the mine or quarry should be opened and worked, then the monies arising thereby shall be applied in or towards such maintenance as aforesaid, in such manner as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall direct; but in such case the surplus thereof, and in every other case all the monies so arising, shall be carried to a separate account, and may be applied for or towards all or any of the purposes for which monies are hereinbefore authorised to be raised by sale of the lunatic's estate, or in such other manner for the lunatic's benefit as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall direct; and upon the lunatic's death the monies remaining on the credit of such separate account shall, as between the representatives of his real and of his personal estate, be considered as real estate.

133. Where a lunatic has a limited estate only in land, and any power whatsoever of leasing the same is vested in him, the committee of his estate may and shall from time to time, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, execute the power, to such extent and in such manner as the order shall direct; and all fines, premiums, and sums of money (if any) received for or upon the granting of any lease under this present provision shall be applied and disposed of in manner directed in sect. 135 of this act respecting the fines, premiums, and sums of money therein mentioned.

134. Where a lunatic is entitled to or has a right to renew, and either it would be for his benefit to renew, or he might, in pursuance of any covenant or agreement, if not under disability, be compelled to renew, a lease made for a life or lives, or for a term of years, either absolute or determinable on a death or otherwise, the committee of his estate may, in his name, under an order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, upon the application of the committee, or of any person entitled to the renewal, accept a surrender of the lease, and make and execute a new lease of the premises comprised in the lease surrendered, for such number of lives, or for such term or terms of years determinable upon such number of lives, or for such term or terms of years absolute, as was or were mentioned or contained in the lease surrendered at the making thereof, or otherwise as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order, but so that no renewed lease be executed by virtue of this act, in pursuance of any covenant or agreement, unless the fine (if any) or such other sum of money (if any) as ought to be paid on renewal, and such things (if any) as ought to be performed in pursuance of the covenant or agreement by the lessee or tenant, be first paid and performed, and a counterpart be duly executed by the lessee.

135. All fines, premiums, and sums of money received upon renewal shall, after deduction of all necessary incidental charges and expenses, be paid to the committee of the estate, and be applied for the lunatic's benefit as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall order; but upon the lunatic's death all such monies as have arisen by such fines, premiums, or sums of money, or so much thereof as then remains unapplied for his benefit, shall, as between the representatives of his real and of his personal estate, be considered as real estate, unless the lunatic be tenant for life only, and then the same shall be considered as personal estate.

136. Where a power is vested in a lunatic for his own benefit, or the consent of a lunatic is necessary to the exercise of a power, and such power of consent is in the nature of a beneficial interest in the lunatic, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be for the lunatic's benefit, and also to be expedient, that the power should be exercised or the consent given, (as the case may be), the committee of the estate may, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under an order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, made upon the application of the committee of the estate, exercise the power or give the consent (as the case may be) in such manner as the order shall direct.

137. Where a power is vested in a lunatic in the character of trustee or guardian, or the consent of a lunatic to the exercise of a power is necessary in the like character, or as a check upon the undue exercise of the power, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be fit and expedient that the power should be exercised or the consent given, (as the case may be), the committee of the estate, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, under an order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, made upon the application of any person interested in the exercise of the power, may exercise the power or give the consent (as the case may be) in such manner as the order shall direct.

138. Where under this act the committee of the estate, under order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, exercises, in the name and on behalf of the lunatic, a power of appointing new trustees vested in the lunatic, the person or persons who shall, after and in consequence of the exercise of the power, be the trustee or trustees, shall have all the same rights and powers as he or they would have had if the order had also been made by the Court of Chancery, under the Trustee Act, 1850, or any act amending the same, or if he or they had been appointed by decree of that Court in a suit duly instituted; and the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may in any such case, where it seems to him to be for the lunatic's benefit, and also expedient, make any and every such order respecting the land or stock or choses in action subject to the trust as might have been made in the same case under the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1850, or any act amending the same, on the appointment thereunder of a new trustee or new trustees.

139. Every surrender, lease, agreement, deed, conveyance, mortgage, or other disposition granted, accepted, made, or executed by virtue of this act, shall be as valid and legal, to all intents and purposes, as if the person in whose name or place or on whose behalf the same was granted, accepted, made, or executed had been of sound mind, and had granted, accepted, made, or executed the same.

140. Where any stock is standing in the name of or is vested in a lunatic beneficially entitled thereto, or is standing in the name of or vested in a committee of the estate of a lunatic, in trust for the lunatic, or as part of his property, and the committee dies intestate, or himself becomes lunatic, or is out of the jurisdiction of or not amenable to the process of the Court of Chancery, or it is uncertain whether the committee be living or dead, or he neglects or refuses to transfer the stock, and to receive and pay over the dividends thereof to a new committee, or as he directs, for the space of fourteen days next after a request in writing for that purpose made by a new committee, then the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may order some fit person to transfer the stock to or into the name of a new committee, or into the name of the Accountant-

General of the Court of Chancery, or otherwise, and also to receive and pay over the dividends thereof, or such sum or sums of money, and in such manner, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may order.

141. Where any stock, or any portion of the capital stock, or any share of any company or society, whether transferable in books or otherwise, is standing in the name of or vested in a person residing out of England and Wales, the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, upon proof to his satisfaction that the person has been declared idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, and that his personal estate has been vested in a curator or other person appointed for the management thereof, according to the laws of the place where he is residing, may order some fit person to make such transfer of the stock, or such portion of the capital stock or share as aforesaid, or any part or parts thereof respectively, to or into the name of the curator or other person appointed as aforesaid, or otherwise, and also to receive and pay over the dividends thereof, as the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may think fit.

142. When an order is made under this act for the transfer of stock, the person to be named in the order for making the transfer shall be some proper officer of the company or society in whose books the transfer is to be made; and where the transfer is to be made in books kept by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, the officer to be named shall be the secretary or deputy secretary, or accountant-general or deputy accountant-general, for the time being, of the said Governor and Company.

143. All transfers and payments made in pursuance of this act shall be valid and binding to all intents and upon all persons whomsoever.

144. This act shall be a full indemnity and discharge to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, their officers and servants, and all other persons respectively, for all acts and things done or permitted to be done pursuant thereto, which acts and things respectively shall not be questioned or impeached in any court of law or equity to their detriment.

145. The Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may order the costs and expenses of and relating to the petitions, applications, orders, directions, conveyances, and transfers to be made in pursuance of this act, or any of them, to be paid and raised out of or from the land or stock, or the rents or dividends in respect of which the same respectively shall be made, in such manner as he may think proper.

146. Nothing in this act contained shall extend to subject any part of a lunatic's property to the debts or demands of his creditors, further or otherwise than as the same is now subject thereto by due course of law.

147. The powers and authorities given by this act to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall extend to all land and stock within any of the dominions, plantations, and colonies of her Majesty, (except Scotland and Ireland).

And with respect to the traverse of an inquisition, be it further enacted as follows:—

148. Any person desiring to traverse may, within the three months next after the day of the return of the inquisition, present a petition for that purpose to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, who is hereby required to hear and determine the petition, and shall, in his order upon it for a traverse, limit a time, not exceeding six months from the date of the order, within which the person desiring to traverse and all other proper parties are to proceed to trial of the traverse, and who may by the same or any other order direct that the person desiring to traverse, not being the person the object of the inquisition, shall, within the three weeks next after the date of the order, give sufficient security to and to the satisfaction of the Masters for all proper parties proceeding to trial within the time to be limited aforesaid.

149. Every person having the right to traverse who shall not within the time hereinbefore limited present his petition for that purpose, or who shall refuse or neglect to give such security as aforesaid, or who shall not proceed to trial within the time to be limited as aforesaid, and his heirs, executors, and administrators, and all others claiming by, through, or under him, shall be absolutely barred of his and their right of traverse, unless the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid shall, under the special circumstances of any particular case, think fit, upon petition for that purpose, to allow the traverse to be had or tried after the time by this act limited, in all which special cases the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid may make such orders as to him shall seem just.

150. If the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid be dissatisfied with the verdict returned upon a traverse, he may order one or more new trial or trials thereon, as to him shall seem meet, and as is usual in cases of issues directed by the Court of Chancery; but no person shall be admitted to traverse oftener than once.

151. The Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid and the Masters may from time to time, after the return of the inquisition, and notwithstanding a petition or order depending relative to a traverse thereof, make such orders and do such acts relative to the custody and commitment of the person, and the commitment, management, and application of the estates and effects of the person, the object of the inquisition, as he or they shall think necessary or proper, (inclusive of the imposition and levying of fees and per-centage as hereinbefore provided); and all things done by any person appointed committee of the person or estate, or by any other person, shall be as valid and effectual, and all committees and other persons respectively, and their respective heirs, executors, and administrators, are hereby indemnified in respect of all such things as aforesaid from and against all actions, suits, and proceedings, damages, costs, charges, and expenses, to be brought, commenced, had, or recovered by the person the object of the inquisition, his heirs, executors, or administrators, or any other person whomsoever, as fully and effectually as if the inquisition had not been traversable, but not further or otherwise.

And with respect to the supersedeas of an inquisition, be it further enacted as follows:—

152. Where any person has been found of unsound mind by inquisition, but the question of unsoundness of mind is disputed, and liberty to traverse has been applied for, and whether granted or not, and it appears to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid to be for the lunatic's benefit and also to be expedient that the inquisition should be superseded on terms and conditions, and subject to an arrangement respecting the lunatic's estate, he may, upon the consent of the lunatic and of the person entitled or claiming to traverse, and of such other persons, if any, whose consent he may deem necessary, order the inquisition to be superseded on such terms and conditions to be fulfilled by the lunatic or such other person, and subject to such arrangement respecting the lunatic's estate, as he may under the circumstances of the case think proper, and may by the same or any other order direct the lunatic and any other persons, being consenting parties to the arrangement, to execute, make, and do, before or after the issuing of the writ of supersedeas, and he and they shall accordingly execute, make, and do, all such conveyances, transfers, and things as may to the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid seem necessary or proper for or for securing the fulfilment of such terms and conditions and the completion of such arrangement as aforesaid, and generally may make such orders as to him may seem proper for effectuating this present provision; and all conveyances, transfers, and things executed, made, and done under any such order of the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, either before or after the issuing of the writ of supersedeas, shall be as valid and binding to all intents, and upon all persons whomsoever, as if the lunatic had not been found or had not been of unsound mind, but not further or otherwise.

And be it declared and further enacted as follows:—

153. The Lord Chancellor, with the advice and assistance aforesaid, may from time to time make such orders as to him shall seem meet for carrying into effect the purposes of this act, and for regulating the form and mode of proceeding before and by the Masters and the practice in matters in lunacy, and for regulating the duties of the several officers in lunacy, and, so far as to him may seem expedient, for altering the course of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed in respect of the matters to which this act relates, or any of them; and any such order as aforesaid may be from time to time rescinded or varied by the like authority; and every such order as aforesaid which shall alter the course of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed in respect of the matters to which this act relates, or any of them, shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days after the making thereof, if Parliament be then assembled, and if not, then within fourteen days after the meeting of Parliament then next following; and if either House of Parliament shall, by resolution, passed within thirty-six days next after any such order as aforesaid has been laid before it, resolve that the whole, or any part thereof, ought not to continue in force, in that case the whole order, or the part of the order specified in the resolution, (as the case may be), shall from and after the passing of the resolution cease to be binding.

LONDON, OCTOBER 8, 1853.

THE case of Miss Cunningham, which has attracted so much attention in both a religious and a political point of view, raises a rather new and not easy question of international law. There can be no doubt whatever, that, according to the general principles of the law of nations, Miss Cunningham rendered herself liable to the penalty imposed by the laws of Tuscany, for the offence of distributing the forbidden books—assuming, of course, that upon the construction of the articles, which have been publicly cited, of the Tuscan code, the acts which she did were within those articles, and would have been a crime punishable in a Tuscan subject. There is no rule of international law, indeed, better established, than that every independent State has a right to make such laws, for its own government, as it thinks fit; and no subject of another State has a right to enter it, without subjecting himself to the laws of the State that he so enters; and this applies surely, in general, to matters of religion as well as to other matters of national right. The 58th section of Vattel's Treatise (vol. 1, p. 316) seems to apply to the very class of cases under discussion. "La religion," he says, "est dans tous les sens un objet très intéressant pour une nation; c'est l'une des matières les plus importantes qui puissent occuper le gouvernement. Un peuple indépendant n'a de compte à rendre qu'à Dieu au sujet de sa religion; il est en droit de se conduire à cet égard, comme en tout autre chose, suivant les lumières de sa conscience, et de ne point souffrir qu'aucun étranger s'ingère dans une affaire si délicate." And in the following section, "Il est donc certain que l'on ne peut se mêler malgré une nation, de ses affaires de religion, sans blesser ses droits et lui faire injure: beaucoup moins est il permis d'employer la force des armes, pour l'obliger à recevoir une doctrine et un culte que l'on regarde comme divins." If, in the passage first quoted, one were to substitute particular things for general symbols, viz. "Tuscany" for "an independent nation," and "Miss Cunningham" for "any stranger," we should have it thus laid down—"Tuscany is not answerable to any but God on the subject of religion: she has a right, on that as on every other subject, to act according to the dictates of her conscience, and not to permit Miss Cunningham to meddle in so delicate a matter."

If, then, this case were looked at according to the established, and if one may so term them, the technical maxims of the law of nations, there could be no question that the Tuscan Government would act lawfully if it insisted on punishing Miss Cunningham according to its own laws, and that it would be a breach of the law of nations for England to go beyond friendly remonstrances and persuasion.

But the broader question is, whether the practice of the civilised nations of Europe, for the last quarter of a century at least, has not introduced, as an element, into the law of nations, an extent of general toleration which makes it inconsistent with the principles of international law, that any State shall make laws, affecting the religious conduct of strangers of a different faith who may come within its territory, to an extent amounting to cruelty and oppression. It must not be overlooked, that the convenience of international relations and intercourse is the foundation of the law of nations; and that a rule which might be very sound one or two centuries back, when intolerance was the prevailing feeling in all, or nearly all, religious communities, because it was in harmony with that intolerance which it was convenient to nations to maintain, may now cease to be sound or applicable, simply because the general convenience of civilised nations is not answered by it.

Even according to Vattel, when a religion is persecuted in a country, foreign nations professing that religion may intercede on behalf of their brethren; and he goes on to say, "that is all they can do legitimately, unless the persecution is carried to intolerable excess; then it falls into the class of manifest tyranny, against which any nation may assist an unfortunate people." (Sect. 62).

Now, if one nation—say Tuscany—chooses to subject Protestants, for doing that which is to them, religiously speaking, a duty, to punishment so severe, that in no other civilised country is such a punishment attached to anything but crime—that is, crime recognised as such, to a greater or less degree, by all the group of civilised nations, of which Tuscany claims to be a member—is not such conduct almost within the exception stated by Vattel? But if it is not so strictly, must not that exception be extended, or expanded, in order to harmonise with the broad and fundamental principles which lie at the root of all international law?

The question is, as we here commenced by observing, not easy. It is of course very easy to deal with such a question by talking of the insulted honour of England, and such topics, more suited to the hustings, than the cabinet of the responsible statesman; but it is not easy to decide where the line is at this day to be drawn, between the just exercise of the sovereign right of every nation to subject foreigners, voluntarily coming within its territory, to the laws framed for its own religious government, and the excess of severity in the exercise of that right, which shall degenerate into such oppression and tyranny, as regards other nations, as will entitle them to claim immunity from such laws for their own subjects.

Whereas an act was passed in the 8 & 9 Vict. [c. 100] "for the Regulation of the Care and Treatment of Lunatics:" and whereas it is expedient to amend the said act as herein-after mentioned: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. Sect. 25 of the said recited act shall be repealed, and any one license to be granted for the reception of lunatics may, in the discretion of the commissioners or justices granting such license, include two or more houses belonging to one proprietor or to two or more joint proprietors, provided that no one of such houses be separated from the other or others of them otherwise than by land in the same occupation, and by a road, or by either of such modes; and all houses, buildings, and lands intended to be included in any license shall be specified, delineated, and described in the plan required by sect. 24 of the said recited act.

2. No person having, after the passing of the said recited act, received for the first time a license for the reception of lunatics, or hereafter receiving for the first time such license, shall receive a license unless he shall reside on the premises licensed; and no two or more persons having, after the passing of the said recited act, received for the first time a joint license for the reception of lunatics, or hereafter receiving for the first time such license, shall receive such license unless they or one of them shall reside on the premises licensed.

3. Sects. 45, 46, 47, 48, and 49 of the said recited act shall be repealed; but such repeal shall not prevent or defeat any prosecution for any offence committed before the commencement of this act, and every such offence shall and may be prosecuted, and every pending prosecution continued, as if this act had not been passed.

4. Save as hereinafter otherwise provided, no person (not being a lunatic) for or in respect of whom any money shall be paid or agreed to be paid shall be boarded or lodged in any licensed house; and, save where otherwise provided or authorised under this or any other act, no person (not being a pauper) shall be received as a lunatic into any licensed house or hospital without an order under the hand of some person according to the form in Schedule (A.) No. 1, annexed to this act, together with such statement of particulars as is contained in the same schedule, nor without the medical certificates, according to the form in Schedule (A.) No. 2, annexed to this act, of two persons, each of whom shall be a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, and shall not be in partnership with or an assistant to the other, and each of whom shall separately from the other have personally examined the person to whom the certificate signed by him relates not more than seven clear days previously to the reception of such person into such house or hospital; and such order as aforesaid may be signed before or after the medical certificates, or either of them; and every person who shall receive any such person as aforesaid into any such house or hospital as aforesaid (save where otherwise provided or authorised under this or any other act) without such order and medical certificates as aforesaid shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

5. Provided always, that any person (not a pauper) may, under special circumstances preventing the examination of such person by two medical practitioners as aforesaid, be received as a lunatic into any licensed house or any hospital upon such order as aforesaid, and with the certificate of one physician, surgeon, or apothecary alone, provided that the statement accompanying such order set forth the special circumstances which prevent the examination of such person by two medical practitioners; but in every such case two other such certificates shall, within three clear days after his reception into such house or hospital, be signed by two other persons, each of whom shall be a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, not in partnership with or an assistant to the other, or the physician, surgeon, or apothecary who signed the certificate on which the patient was received, and not connected with such house or hospital, and shall within such time, and separately from the other of them, have personally examined the person so received as a lunatic; and every person who, having received any person as a lunatic into any house or hospital as aforesaid upon the certificate of one medical practitioner alone as aforesaid, shall keep or permit such person to remain in such house or hospital beyond the said period of three clear days without such further certificates as aforesaid shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

6. Provided also, that it shall be lawful for the proprietor or superintendent of any licensed house, with the previous assent in writing of two of the commissioners, such assent not to be given until after such commissioners have, by personal examination of the patient, satisfied themselves of his desire to remain, to entertain and keep in such house as a boarder any person who may have been discharged as a patient from such house for such time after such discharge as he may desire to remain, not exceeding the time specified in such assent, and also, for the benefit of any patient in such house, and with the previous assent in writing of two of the commissioners, to receive and accommodate as a boarder therein, for a time to be specified in the assent, any relative or friend of such patient; and any two of the commissioners may from time to time, by any writing under their hands, extend or revoke any such assent as aforesaid; and every such patient so retained after discharge, and every such relative or friend so accommodated, shall, if required, be produced to the commissioners and visitors respectively at their respective visits.

7. Save where otherwise provided or authorised under any act, no pauper shall be received into any licensed house or any hospital without an order according to the form in Schedule (B.) No. 1, annexed to this act, under the hand of one justice, or under the hands of an officiating clergyman, and the relieving officer or one of the overseers of the union or parish from which such pauper shall be sent, together with such statement of particulars as is contained in the same schedule, nor without the medical certificate, according to the form in Schedule (B.) No. 2, annexed to this act, of a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, who shall have personally examined the pauper to whom it relates not more than seven clear days previously to his reception; and every person who shall receive any pauper into any such house or hospital as aforesaid (save where otherwise provided or authorised under any act) without such order and medical certificate as last aforesaid shall be guilty of a misdemeanour: provided always, that this enactment shall not by implication or otherwise give any power or authority to make such order, or extend, alter, or affect any power or authority expressly given by any act to any justice, officiating clergyman, relieving officer, or overseer to make or join in making any such order, or any provisions giving or relating to such power or authority.

8. Where, under sect. 90 of the said recited act, the like order and medical certificates are required on the reception or taking the charge or care of any one person as a lunatic or alleged lunatic as are thereinbefore required on the reception of a patient (not being a pauper) into a licensed house, the like order and medical certificates (in lieu of those required as first aforesaid) shall hereafter be required on the reception or taking the charge or care of any such person as are by this act required on the reception of a patient (not being a pauper) into a licensed house.

9. If any superintendent, officer, nurse, attendant, servant, or other person employed in any registered hospital or licensed house, or any person having the care or charge of any single patient, or any attendant of any single patient, in any way abuse, or ill-treat, or wilfully neglect any patient in such hospital or house, or such single patient, or if any person detaining, or taking or having the care or charge, or concerned or taking part in the custody, care, or treatment, of any lunatic or person alleged to be a lunatic, in any way abuse, ill-treat, or wilfully neglect such lunatic or alleged lunatic, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be subject to indictment for every such offence, or to forfeit for every such offence, on a summary conviction thereof before two justices, any sum not exceeding 20*l*.

10. Every physician, surgeon, and apothecary signing any certificate under or for the purposes of this act shall specify therein the facts upon which he has formed his opinion that the person to whom such certificate relates is a lunatic, an idiot, or a person of unsound mind, and distinguish in such certificate facts observed by himself from facts communicated to him by others; and no person shall be received into any registered hospital or licensed house, or as a single patient, under any certificate which purports to be founded only upon facts communicated by others.

11. If after the reception of any lunatic it appear that the order or the medical certificate, or (if more than one) both or either of the medical certificates, upon which he was received, is or are in any respect incorrect or defective, such order and medical certificate or certificates may be amended by the person signing the same at any time within fourteen days next after the reception of such lunatic: provided nevertheless, that no such amendment shall have any force or effect unless the same shall receive the sanction of one or more of the commissioners.

12. No physician, surgeon, or apothecary who, or whose father, brother, son, partner, or assistant, is wholly or partly the proprietor of, or a regular professional attendant in, a licensed house or a hospital, shall sign any certificate for the reception of a patient into such house or hospital, and no physician, surgeon, or apothecary shall himself, or by his servants or agents, receive to board or lodge in any unlicensed house, or take the charge or care of any person upon or under any medical certificate signed by himself or his father, brother, son, partner, or assistant, and no physician, surgeon, or apothecary having (either before or after the passing of this act) signed any certificate for the reception of any person shall be the regular professional attendant of such person while under care x charge under such certificate; and no physician, surgeon, or apothecary who, or whose father, brother, son, partner, or assistant, shall sign the order hereinbefore required for the reception of a patient, shall sign any certificate for the reception of the same patient.

13. Any physician, surgeon, or apothecary who shall sign any certificate, or do any other act (not declared to be a misdemeanour) contrary to any of the provisions herein contained, shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding 20*l.*; and any physician, surgeon, or apothecary who shall falsely state or certify anything in any certificate under this act, and any person who shall sign any certificate under this act in which he shall be described as a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, not being a physician, surgeon, or apothecary respectively within the meaning of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

14. It shall be lawful for the commissioners, by an order under their common seal, where they see fit so to do, to permit the visitation of any single patient by a physician, surgeon, or apothecary less frequently than once in every two weeks, as required by sect. 90 of the recited act, and to prescribe from time to time how often any single patient shall be visited by such a physician, surgeon, or apothecary as therein mentioned; but where such visitation of any single patient so often as once in every two weeks is so dispensed with, and such patient is in the care or charge of a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, such physician, surgeon, or apothecary shall once at the least in every two weeks make an entry in a book to be kept for that purpose, to be called "The Medical Journal," of the condition of the patient's health, both mental and bodily, together with the date of such entry, and such book shall be produced to the visiting commissioner on every visit, and shall be signed by him as having been so produced, and every such physician, surgeon, or apothecary who shall make an untrue entry in the said book shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

15. It shall be lawful for one or more of the visitors appointed in or for any county or borough under the said recited act, upon the request in writing of the commissioners, or any two of them, under their hands, so to do, to visit any person detained in any unlicensed house in such county or borough as a single patient, and to inquire into and report to the commissioners on the treatment and state of health, bodily and mental, of such patient, and to inspect the order and certificates on which such person was received; and the provisions of the said recited act for and concerning the remuneration or payment of any such visitor, being a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, in respect of the execution of the duties of that act, and for the payment of the costs, charges, and expenses incurred by any visitor in proceedings under that act, shall extend and be applicable to and for the remuneration or payment of any visitor, being a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, visiting as aforesaid any single patient, and to and for the payment of the costs, charges, and expenses incurred by any visitor in or about such visit as aforesaid.

16. Every physician, surgeon, and apothecary who visits any single patient, or under whose care or charge any single patient shall be, shall on the 10th January, or within seven days from that time, in every year, report in writing to the commissioners the state of health, bodily and mental, of such patient, with such other circumstances as he may deem necessary to be communicated to the commissioners; and it shall be lawful for the commissioners, at any other time and from time to time as they see occasion, to call for and require from any such physician, surgeon, or apothecary a report in writing relative to any single patient visited by him or under his care or charge, in such form and specifying such particulars as the commissioners may direct.

17. The provisions contained in sects. 72 and 73 of the said recited act for the discharge of patients (not being paupers) from licensed houses shall extend and be applicable to and for the discharge of any single patient: provided always, that this enactment shall not extend to authorise the discharge of any single patient, if the physician, surgeon, or apothecary who has the care or charge of or visits such patient certify in writing under his hand that in his opinion such patient is dangerous, and unfit to be at large, together with the grounds on which such opinion is founded, unless one of the commissioners shall consent in writing to the discharge of such patient.

18. It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, upon the report of the Commissioners in Lunacy, to order the discharge of any person received or detained as a single patient, or to give such orders and directions in reference to such patient as the Lord Chancellor shall think fit; and any person detaining any such patient for the space of three days after a copy of such order for his discharge shall have been served on him, or left at the house in which such person so ordered to be discharged is detained, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

19. The superintendent or proprietor of every registered hospital and licensed house, and every person having the care or charge of any single patient, shall forthwith, upon the recovery of any patient in such hospital or house, or of such single patient, transmit notice of such recovery in the case of a patient not a pauper to the person who signed the order for his reception, or by whom the last payment on account of such patient was made, and in the case of a pauper, to the guardians of his union or parish, or if there be no such guardians, to one of the overseers of the poor of his parish, or if such pauper be chargeable to any county, to the clerk of the peace thereof; and in case such patient be not discharged or removed within fourteen days from the giving of such notice, such superintendent, proprietor, or person as aforesaid shall immediately after the expiration of such period transmit notice of the recovery of such patient to the commissioners, and also, in the case of a licensed house within the jurisdiction of any visitors, to the clerk of such visitors, with the date of the notice firstly in this enactment mentioned, and where notice is so given to the clerk of any visitors he shall forthwith communicate the same to the visitors, or two of them, one of whom shall be a physician, surgeon, or apothecary; and in case of the death of any patient in any hospital or licensed house, a statement setting forth the time and cause of the death, and the duration of the disease of which such patient died, shall be prepared and signed by the medical person or persons who attended the patient during the illness which terminated in death, and such statement shall be entered in the "Case Book," and a copy of such statement, certified by the superintendent or proprietor, shall, within two days of the date of the death, be transmitted to the coroner for the county or borough, and in case such coroner, after receiving such statement, shall think that any reasonable suspicion attends the cause and circumstances of the death of such patient, he shall summon a jury to inquire into the cause of such death.

20. Any person, having authority to order the discharge of any patient (not being a pauper) from any asylum, registered hospital, or licensed house, or of any single patient, may, with the previous consent in writing of two of the commissioners, direct, by an order in writing under his hand, the removal of such patient to any asylum, registered hospital, or licensed house, or to the care or charge of any person mentioned or named in such order; and every such order and consent shall be made and given respectively in duplicate, and one of the duplicates shall be delivered to and left with the superintendent or proprietor of the asylum, hospital, or house from which the patient is ordered to be removed, and the other duplicate shall be delivered to and left with the superintendent or proprietor of the asylum, hospital, or house into which or the person into whose care or charge the patient is ordered to be removed; and such order for removal, together with such consent in writing, shall be a sufficient authority for the removal of such patient, and also for his reception into the asylum, registered hospital, or licensed house into which or by the person into whose care or charge he is ordered to be removed: provided always, that a copy of the order and certificates upon which such patient was received into the asylum, hospital, or house from which he is removed, or as a single patient, by the person from whose care he is removed, certified under the hand of the superintendent or proprietor of such asylum, hospital, or house, or of such person as last aforesaid, to be a true copy, shall be furnished by him free of expense, and shall be delivered, with one duplicate of the said order of removal and consent, to the superintendent or proprietor of the asylum, hospital, or house to which or to the person to whose care or charge such patient is removed.

21. Every person from whose care or charge any single patient shall be discharged shall transmit to the commissioners a written notice of such discharge within the like period, and under the like penalty for default, as by the said recited act is required and provided in the case of the discharge of a patient from a licensed house.

23. Where any person has already been received as a lunatic under order and certificates, and shall be detained thereunder, and where any person shall hereafter be in like manner received and detained, and the commissioners represent to the Lord Chancellor that it is desirable that the extent and nature of his income should be ascertained, and the application thereof, the Lord Chancellor may, if he think fit, through the Registrar in Lunacy, require that the person signing the order, or other the person paying for the care and maintenance of the lunatic or having the management of the property, shall transmit to the Lord Chancellor a statement in writing, to the best of his knowledge, of the particulars of the property and income of the lunatic and of the application of the income.

26. The superintendent or proprietor of every registered hospital or licensed house shall, within one week after the dismissal for misconduct of any nurse or attendant employed in such hospital or house, transmit to the commissioners, by the post, information in writing under his hand of such dismissal, and of the cause thereof; and every superintendent or proprietor neglecting to transmit such information to the commissioners within the period aforesaid shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding 10*l*.

29. It shall be lawful for the commissioners, where, for any reasons to be entered upon the minutes of the board, any case appears to them specially to call for immediate investigation, to authorise and direct, by an order under their common seal, any competent person or persons to visit and examine and report to them upon the mental and bodily state and condition of any lunatic or alleged lunatic in any asylum, hospital, or licensed house, or of any pauper lunatic in a workhouse or elsewhere, or of any lunatic or alleged lunatic under the care or charge of any person as a single patient, and to inquire into and report upon any matters into which the commissioners are authorised to inquire; and every such person shall, for the special purposes mentioned in such order, have all the powers of a commissioner; and the commissioners may allow to every such person a reasonable sum for his services and expenses, such sum to be paid in manner provided by the said recited act with regard to expenses incurred by or under the authority of the commissioners in proceedings thereunder; but this enactment shall not be taken to exonerate the commissioners from the performance of any duty by law imposed on them.

30. The committee having the management or government of every registered hospital shall, within three months after the passing of this act, in the case of every hospital now registered, and within three months after the registration of every hospital hereafter to be registered under the said recited act, submit the existing regulations, or regulations to be framed by such committee, to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State for his approval, and any such committee may, with the like approbation, alter and vary such regulations as they think necessary; and all such regulations so approved shall be printed, abided by, and observed, and a copy thereof shall be sent to the commissioners, and another copy thereof kept hung up in the visitors' room of the hospital.

31. It shall be lawful for the commissioners, with the sanction and approbation of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, from time to time to make regulations for the government of any house licensed for the reception of lunatics; and such regulations of the commissioners, or a copy thereof, shall be transmitted by their secretary to the proprietor or resident superintendent of every licensed house to which the same relate, and shall be abided by and observed therein.

32. The report required by sect. 88 of the said recited act to be made by the commissioners to the Lord Chancellor in the month of June in every year of the state and condition of the several houses, hospitals, asylums, and other places visited by them under that act, and of the care of the patients therein, and of such other particulars as they think deserving of notice, shall be made in or before the month of March in every year, and shall be made up to the end of the preceding year.

33. The provision in sect. 113 of the said recited act, for and concerning the payment for attendance and trouble of any person (not being a commissioner) employed under that enactment, and of the travelling or other expenses of any person so employed, and as to the fund out of which such payment is to be made, shall extend and be applicable to and in the case of any person (not being a commissioner) required to visit and examine any lunatic or supposed lunatic under sect. 112 of the said recited act.

34. Any person who wilfully obstructs the commissioners or any of them, or any other person authorised by an order in writing under the hand of the Lord Chancellor or her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the provisions of sect. 112 or 113 of the said recited act, to visit and examine any lunatic or supposed lunatic, or to inspect or inquire into the state of any asylum, hospital, gaol, house, or place wherein any lunatic or person represented to be lunatic is confined or alleged to be confined, in the execution of such order, and any person who wilfully obstructs any person authorised under this act by any order of the commissioners to make any visit and examination or inquiry in the execution of such order, shall (without prejudice to any proceedings and in addition to any punishment to which such person obstructing the execution of such order would otherwise be liable) forfeit for every such offence any sum not exceeding 20*l*.

35. Sect. 116 of the said recited act shall be repealed, and the Royal Hospital of Bethlehem shall henceforth be subject to the provisions of the said recited act and of this act, in the same manner as if the same had not been exempted from the said recited act, and shall be forthwith registered as an hospital accordingly, in pursuance of sect. 43 of the said recited act.

36. In the construction of the said recited act and of this act the words "physician," "surgeon," and "apothecary" shall respectively mean a physician, surgeon, and apothecary duly authorized or licensed to practise as such by or as a member of some college, university, company, or institution legally constituted and qualified to grant such authority or license in some part of the United Kingdom, or having been in practice as an apothecary in England or Wales on or before the 1st August, 1815, and being in actual practice as such physician, surgeon, or apothecary; the expression "officiating clergyman of the parish" shall include the chaplain of the workhouse of the same parish, or of the workhouse of the union to which such parish belongs; the expression "single patient" shall mean any person received or taken charge of as a lunatic under sect. 90 of the said recited act, or under such section as amended by this act; and the expression "attendant" shall mean any person, whether male or female, who shall be employed either wholly or partially in the personal care, control, or management of any lunatic in any registered hospital or licensed house, or of any single patient; and in the construction of this act the word "board," as used in relation to the Commissioners in Lunacy, shall mean any three or more of the commissioners assembled at a meeting convened in pursuance of sect. 16 of the said recited act, or holden under any order or rule for the time being in force made under sect. 70 of the said recited act for regulating the duties of the commissioners.

37. The said recited act and this act shall be construed together as one act, and a Queen's printers' copy of this act shall be bound up in the "Visitors' Book" of every hospital and licensed house together with the said recited act.

38. Nothing in this act shall affect the provisions of any of the following acts, (that is to say), an act of the session holden in the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 94; an act of the session holden in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 14; and an act of the session holden in the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, or any other provisions concerning criminal lunatics, save as hereinafter provided; (that is to say), it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to issue his warrant to remove or discharge any insane person who shall be in custody under the provisions of the said act of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, provided it shall be duly certified to such Secretary of State, by two physicians or surgeons, that such insane person was harmless, and might be discharged from restraint as an insane person without danger to himself or to others, in like manner as if it had been certified to such Secretary of State that such person had become of sound mind, anything in the said act or any other act to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

39. And whereas by the said recited act it is provided that every person to be appointed in the room of any commissioner, being a barrister of five years' standing at the bar and upwards, shall be a practising barrister of not less than five years' standing at the bar: and whereas it is expedient to amend the said provisions as hereinafter mentioned; the present or any future secretary to the commissioners, if at the time of his appointment to be such secretary he was or shall have been a practising barrister of not less than five years' standing at the bar, shall be eligible to be appointed a commissioner in the room of such commissioner as aforesaid.

Pleasant Dairy and Staindale Farm, containing 101 acres, 40 of which are in pasture close to the village, and the remainder in tillage. 4. Moor Farm, containing 168 A. 3 A. 26 P., of which 26 acres are in plantation, 33 acres in grass, and the remainder in tillage. The farm-houses and buildings are extensive and commodious, and nearly the whole of the estate has been thoroughly drained. All the farms were re-let upon a new valuation in 1851, at very low rents, since which considerable sums have been expended in drainage and improvements, upon which the tenants pay interest. The farms can be seen at any time by permission of the tenants. The Pickton Station of the Leeds Northern Railway is within one mile, and the Cowton Station of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway within five miles. Two packs of fox-hounds and one of harriers hunt the immediate neighbourhood. The property will be offered in one lot, and if not sold, will then be divided as follows:—Lot 1. Hill House and Low Field Farms. Lot 2. Pleasant Dairy and Staindale Farm. Lot 3. Moor Farm. The above is well worthy the attention of a manufacturer of the West Riding, as an immediate investment, and a future site for a residence within easy distance of his business.

LONDON, OCTOBER 15, 1853.

As the Quarter Sessions will be held throughout the country next week, a synopsis of recent decisions and statutes on the Criminal Law will doubtless be acceptable to our readers*.

Abduction.—By the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 19, if any person, from motives of lucre, take away or detain an heiress against her will, with intent to marry or defile her, he is guilty of felony, and may be transported for life. By sect. 20, if any person unlawfully take or cause to be taken any unmarried girl under the age of sixteen out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, he is guilty of a misdemeanour. By sect. 21, if any person maliciously, either by force or fraud, lead or take away, or decoy or entice away, or detain a child under the age of ten years, with intent to deprive the parents of the possession of such child, he is guilty of felony, and may be transported for seven years, (changed to penal servitude by the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99). We have been particular in giving the substance of these three sections, because a late case turned upon the language used in them, or rather upon the word "take" in the 20th section. It was contended that the taking must be without the girl's consent, and that if she voluntarily left her father with the abductor it was no offence; and certainly the expressions attributed to Parke, B., in Reg. v. Meadows, (1 Car. & K. 399), seemed capable of supporting this view. That case was, however, explained by Parke, B., on the present occasion, who, having referred to his notes of it, said, that, according to the facts, the girl and the prisoner ran away together, and there could not be said to be a taking out of the possession of the father. In the case now under consideration, the prisoner, having lodged at the father's house, and having told him he was going to emigrate to America, left the house, having persuaded the daughter (a girl between twelve and thirteen years) to join him by another road, and to go with him to America. They accordingly met, and travelled together in a covered van to London. The Court for Crown Cases Reserved held, first, that, comparing the three sections together, it was not necessary that the "taking" (in sect. 20) should be against the will of the girl. Parke, B., said, "The 19th section relates entirely to the party abducted; the 20th and 21st to those who have the custody or care of her." Secondly, it was decided that there was a taking from the possession of the father, who, although she had left his house under these circumstances, yet had a general possession of her until the moment of the taking. Parke, B., said, "If she absolutely abandoned her father's possession, and the prisoner then took her away, it would not be within the statute; but if she abandoned the possession of her father, supposing the prisoner would be at a given point to take her away, that would be no complete determination of her father's possession; she would have returned to her father if the prisoner had not been there to take her to London." (Reg. v. Mantelov, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 352; 22 L. J., M. C., 115).

Evidence.—Upon the trial of a prisoner for setting fire to his own house, with intent to defraud an insurance office, notice to produce the policy was given to the prisoner in the middle of the day before the trial. His residence was thirty miles from the place of trial. The policy was not produced, and the Court held that secondary evidence of it was not admissible. (Reg. v. Kitson, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 422; 22 L. J., M. C., 118). The Court appear to have thought that the indictment itself was not sufficient notice.

Under this head we may refer to the case of Reg. v. Stokes, (17 Jur., part 1, p. 192), before Alderson, B., at the Essex Spring Assizes, in which, upon a policeman deposing to statements made by the prisoner in consequence of questions put by the witness, that learned judge said, "I am not one of those who think that policemen should be blind and deaf to all that prisoners do or say in their presence; but then they ought not, in general, to ask questions of prisoners, for we are not always certain that that is done fairly. It is a more difficult thing to ask questions than you imagine, and still more so to hear the answers, for, when you get an answer, you twist it in your own mind so as to make it bear on the guilt of the prisoner. You merely ask questions to compromise the man—not questions to let him off. If you do either, you should do both."

False Pretences.—The prisoner called on the prosecutrix, and asked her to subscribe to a burial club, which he said was strong and respectable, and had 7000*l.* in the bank. She, however, declined. A month afterwards he called again for the same purpose, and still said the club was strong and respectable, but did not repeat the statement respecting the money. It was held, on an indictment for false pretences, that the jury were at liberty to connect the two statements together as one continuing representation. (Reg. v. Welman, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 421; 22 L. J., M. C., 118).

Husband and Wife.—See Receiving stolen Goods.

Indecent Exposure.—The prisoner was indicted for an indecent exposure in an omnibus, several passengers being therein. The Court held an omnibus to be a sufficiently public place to support the indictment, and also that the stat. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, was no answer to the objection, that the Courts should have concluded ad commune nocumentum. (Reg. v. Holmes, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 562; 22 L. J., M. C., 122).

Indictment.—The question, whether several previous convictions may be alleged in one indictment, has been decided in the affirmative, Lord Campbell saying it was very useful to do so, as there might be no proof of identity in one case, when it would be necessary to resort to proof of another; and that it was also useful to the judge, for the purpose of assisting him in meting out the proper punishment. (Reg. v. Clark and Others, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 582; 22 L. J., M. C., 135; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 9).

Larceny.—A curious instance of the subtle distinctions which abound in this, the most common of all offences, was lately afforded in a charge against a man of having stolen gas. The prisoner inserted a connecting pipe into the entrance and exit pipes, thereby diverting the gas from the meter, and avoiding payment for the full quantity consumed. The entrance and exit pipes were the property of the prisoner, and therefore suggested the defence that the property and the possession of the gas were in him at the time of the offence. It was also contended that there was no asportation of the gas, and that as a penalty of 50*l.* was imposed for the offence, it was reduced below the grade of felony. The Court, however, held the punishment to be cumulative, and the fraudulent abstracting of the gas to amount to larceny. (Reg. v. White, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 536; 22 L. J., M. C., 123).

Another case is pending before the same Court, (Reg. v. Reed), in which, we understand, there is a difference of opinion whether the offence amounts to embezzlement or larceny. The prisoner was sent by his master with a horse and cart, containing empty sacks, (all the property of his master), to fetch some coals for his master, who had paid for them. They were put into the sacks, and the prisoner then wrongfully sold some of the coals.

Parent and Child.—In order to constitute a misdemeanour at common law, for parents neglecting to provide their infant children with necessary food or clothing, an actual injury to the health must be shewn, and proof that they must have suffered to some extent is not sufficient. (Reg. v. Philpot, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 399; 22 L. J., M. C., 113). It was proved that the prisoner had left her children without food or clothing, and remained absent three days and nights; that from their tender age the children were unable to provide for themselves; that the prisoner had the means of providing for them; and that but for the attention of a poor neighbour they must have suffered severely, and probably would have died from want of food, but that they did not actually suffer serious injury. It is to be regretted that the common law is unable to reach such a case as this; but the deficiency should be supplied by positive enactment; the criminality is the same whether the children actually suffer or not; it is mere chance, as far as the accused is concerned, whether the children so grossly neglected die or live.

Perjury.—In Reg. v. Millard and Another (17 Jur., part 1, p. 400; 22 L. J., M. C., 108) it was held that perjury might be assigned on evidence given before a magistrate, under the Malicious Trespass Act, 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30, s. 24, although the information was not upon oath. It would be otherwise under the 30th section. As was said by Parke, B., "no magistrate can proceed without an information; but unless the statute requires that it should be in writing or upon oath, it need not be so."

Receiving stolen Goods.—A wife cannot be convicted of feloniously receiving goods stolen by her husband. (Reg. v. Brooks, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 490; 22 L. J., M. C., 121). This is in accordance with previous decisions to the effect that she cannot be accessory after the fact to any offence committed by her husband. It is here proper to remark, that the recent statute, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, (ante, p. 379), rendering husbands and wives competent witnesses for and against each other, does not apply to criminal cases. (Sect. 2). Another statute to be noticed here is the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, for abolishing transportation except in certain cases, and substituting various terms of penal servitude.

14. Discretion of Courts as to alternative Punishments not to be affected.
15. Transportation to include Banishment.
16. Commencement of Act.

Whereas, by reason of the difficulty of transporting offenders beyond the seas, it has become expedient to substitute in certain cases other punishment in lieu of transportation: be it therefore enacted &c. as follows:—

Sect. 1. After the commencement of this act no person shall be sentenced to transportation who if this act had not been passed would not have been liable to be transported for life, or for a term of fourteen years or upwards; and no person shall be sentenced to transportation for any term less than fourteen years.

2. Any person who if this act had not been passed might have been sentenced to transportation for a term of less than fourteen years shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be kept in penal servitude for such term as hereinafter mentioned.

3. Any person who if this act had not been passed might have been sentenced to transportation for a term of fourteen years or upwards or for life shall, after the commencement of this act, be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be sentenced either to such transportation for fourteen years or upwards or for life, or to be kept in penal servitude for such term as under this act may be awarded instead of such transportation.

4. The terms of penal servitude to be awarded instead of the transportation to which any offender would have been liable if this act had not been passed shall be as follows, (that is to say),

Instead of transportation for seven years or for a term not exceeding seven years, penal servitude for the term of four years:

Instead of any term of transportation exceeding seven years and not exceeding ten years, penal servitude for any term not less than four and not exceeding six years:

Instead of any term of transportation exceeding ten years and not exceeding fifteen years, penal servitude for any term not less than six and not exceeding eight years:

Instead of any term of transportation exceeding fifteen years, penal servitude for any term not less than six and not exceeding ten years:

Instead of transportation for the term of life, penal servitude for the term of life:

And in every case where, at the discretion of the Court, one of any two or more of the terms of transportation hereinbefore mentioned might have been awarded, the Court shall have the like discretion to award one of the two or more terms of penal servitude hereinbefore mentioned in relation to such terms of transportation.

5. Whenever her Majesty, or the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland for the time being, shall be pleased to extend mercy to any offender convicted of any offence for which he may be liable to the punishment of death, upon condition of his being kept to penal servitude for any term of years or for life, such intention of mercy shall have the same effect and may be signified in the same manner, and all courts, justices, and others shall give effect thereto and to the condition of the pardon in like manner, as, in the cases where her Majesty, or the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland for the time, is or are now pleased to extend mercy upon condition of transportation beyond seas, the order for the execution of such punishment as her Majesty, or the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland for the time being, may have made the condition of her, his, or their mercy being substituted for the order for transportation.

6. Every person who under this act shall be sentenced or ordered to be kept in penal servitude may, during the term of the sentence or order, be confined in any such prison or place of confinement in any part of the United Kingdom, or in any river, port, or harbour of the United Kingdom, in which persons under sentence or order of transportation may now by law be confined, or in any other prison in the United Kingdom, or in any part of her Majesty's dominions beyond the seas, or in any port or harbour thereof, as one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may from time to time direct; and such person may during such term be kept to hard labour and otherwise dealt with in all respects as persons sentenced to transportation may now by law be dealt with while so confined.

7. All acts and provisions of acts now applicable with respect to persons under sentence or order of transportation shall, so far as may be consistent with the express provisions of this act, be construed to extend and be applicable to persons under any sentence or order of penal servitude under this act; and all the powers and provisions contained in the act of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, authorising the appointment by her Majesty from time to time of places of confinement as therein mentioned for male offenders under sentence or order of transportation, and authorising her Majesty to order male offenders convicted in Great Britain and under sentence or order of transportation to be kept to hard labour in any part of her Majesty's dominions out of England, shall extend and be applicable to and for the appointment by her Majesty of like places of confinement in any part of the United Kingdom for offenders (whether male or female) sentenced under this act in any part of the United Kingdom, and to and for the ordering of such offenders to be kept to hard labour in any part of her Majesty's dominions out of England; and all the provisions of the said act concerning the removal to or from and confinement in the places of confinement in or out of England, appointed under the said act, of the offenders therein mentioned, and all acts and provisions of acts now in force concerning or relating to the regulation and government of such places of confinement, and the custody, treatment, management, and control of or otherwise in relation to the offenders confined therein, shall, so far as the same may be consistent with the express provisions of the act, extend and be applicable to and for the removal to and from and confinement in the places of confinement appointed under this act of the offenders sentenced in any part of the United Kingdom, and otherwise be applicable to and in respect of such places of confinement and the offenders to be confined therein.

8. Provided always, that all the powers vested under this act, expressly or by reference to any other act, in one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, shall, in relation to places of confinement in Ireland, or where such powers are otherwise to be exercised in Ireland, be exercised by the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland; and where the signature of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State would be necessary in relation to the exercise of such powers, the signature of such Lord Lieutenant or chief governor or governors, or his or their chief secretary, shall be sufficient in the case of the exercise of such powers by such Lord Lieutenant or chief governor or governors.

9. It shall be lawful for her Majesty, by an order in writing under the hand and seal of one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to grant to any convict now under sentence of transportation, or who may hereafter be sentenced to transportation, or to any punishment substituted for transportation by this act, a license to be at large in the United Kingdom and the Channel Islands, or in such part thereof respectively as in such license shall be expressed, during such portion of his or her term of transportation or imprisonment, and upon such conditions in all respects, as to her Majesty shall seem fit; and it shall be lawful for her Majesty to revoke or alter such license by a like order, at her Majesty's pleasure.

10. So long as such license shall continue in force and unrevoked, such convict shall not be liable to be imprisoned or transported by reason of his or her sentence, but shall be allowed to go and remain at large, according to the term of such license.

11. Provided always, that if it shall please her Majesty to revoke any such license as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by warrant under his hand and seal, to signify to any one of the police magistrates of the metropolis that such license has been revoked, and to require such magistrate to issue his warrant under his hand and seal for the apprehension of the convict to whom such license was granted, and such magistrate shall issue his warrant accordingly, and such warrant shall and may be executed by the constable to whom the same shall be delivered for that purpose in any part of the United Kingdom, or in the Isles of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, or Sark, and shall have the same force and effect in all the said places as if the same had been originally issued or subsequently indorsed by a justice of the peace or magistrate, or other lawful authority having jurisdiction in the place where the same shall be executed; and such convict when apprehended under such warrant shall be brought, as soon as he conveniently may be, before the magistrate by whom the said warrant shall have been issued, or some other magistrate of the same court, and such magistrate shall thereupon make out his warrant under his hand and seal for the recommitment of such convict to the prison or place of confinement from which he was released by virtue of the said license, and such convict shall be so recommitment accordingly, and shall thereupon be remitted to his or her original sentence, and shall undergo the residue thereof as if no such license had been granted.

12. No person shall, after the commencement of this act, be liable to be transported by reason only of a conviction for larceny after a previous conviction for felony, but every such person so convicted may be punished by penal servitude for any term not less than four years, and not more than ten years.

13. Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall in any manner affect her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy, or any prerogative of mercy vested in the Lord Lieutenant or other chief governor or governors of Ireland for the time being.

14. Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall interfere with or affect the authority or discretion of any court in respect of any punishment which such court may now award or pass on any offender other than transportation, but where such other punishment may be awarded, at the discretion of the court, instead of transportation, or in addition thereto, the same may be awarded instead of or (as the case may be) in addition to the punishment substituted for transportation under this act.

15. For the purposes of this act, the term "transportation" shall include banishment beyond the seas.

16. This act shall commence from and after the 1st September, 1853.

LONDON, OCTOBER 22, 1853.

BEFORE the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, there was no power in any Court or in any person to correct substantial errors, either in letters-patent or in the inrolled specifications of letters-patent. There was, however, always power in the Master of the Rolls, in his capacity of Keeper of the Records, to make corrections of merely clerical errors in any inrolled document, and consequently in the inrolled specification of an invention. Thus, in Redmond's case, (5 Russ. 44), the copying clerk, in ingrossing a specification and the plans annexed thereto, had by mistake transposed the number by which in the specification reference was made to the plan. On the error being discovered, the Master of the Rolls ordered the inrolment to be corrected. It is not clear from the short report of this case whether the error was in the document commonly called the specification—viz. that parchment document which the patentee signs and acknowledges, and which is afterwards copied on the rolls—or whether that document was correct, and the error was that of the copying clerk in the Inrolment-office. And this distinction was pointed out in a recent case, not yet reported, (Re Dismore's Patent, at the Rolls, July 29 and 30, 1853), in which the error—the mistake of a Christian name—had been committed by the clerk who copied the draft specification for the parchment copy, which was acknowledged; so that the copy tendered by the patentee at the Inrolment-office, to be there copied on the rolls, was correctly copied, and the inrolment and the acknowledged specification corresponded. The Court, on being asked to rectify the error on the inrolment, hesitated, doubting at first whether it had any power to do more than make the inrolment correspond with the copy of the document brought in for inrolment.

In this case, Redmond's case and Sharp's case (1 Web. Pat. Cas. 646) were cited; and it was urged that the power of the Court, according to the doctrine laid down in Sharp's case, was to see that the inrolment was according to the intention of the party; so that if there was error, and the inrolment, therefore, contrary to the intention of the party, it was immaterial whether that error was in the copy of the specification tendered for inrolment, or in the copy actually put on the rolls. The Court was not, however, satisfied with the reasoning; and there being no reported case shewing the exact point to have been determined, search was made for precedents, and the order made in the case of Rubery's Patent, made by Lord Langdale on the 9th January, 1841, was produced. In that case the statement was, that the clerk of the agent, to whom the ingrossing of the draft specification was intrusted, made an error in a date, so that the ingrossed specification, which was acknowledged and tendered for inrolment, was itself wrong, and the inrolment corresponded with it. On a petition to correct the inrolment, Lord Langdale made an order that the proper officer should attend with the record, and that it should be amended. The Solicitor-General had in that case subscribed the petition. On this authority, Sir J. Romilly, M. R., made a similar order in Dismore's case, requiring, however, that the signature of the Attorney or Solicitor General should first be obtained to the petition, and that the letters-patent should be produced for the inspection of the Court.

The practice may therefore now be considered settled, as to the correction of merely clerical errors in inrolled specifications, that whether the error was originally in the acknowledged copy of the specification brought in for inrolment, or whether, that being correct, the error was originally in the inrolment itself, the Court will correct the error in the record of the specification.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—In THE JURIST of the 24th September a correspondent states that the judges of the county courts were, in the spring of the year, requested "to send the instruments of their appointment to the Audit Office," and "that these documents have not been returned," and that "the Lords of the Treasury had issued a circular requiring the judges to have them stamped." It ought not to be inferred that all the county court judges have abstained from having the instrument of their appointment stamped. Where such instrument was properly stamped by order of the county court judge, as it was incumbent on him to have done on his appointment, with a 75*l.* stamp, such instrument of appointment has been returned to him. Your correspondent is also wrong in saying that "the writings of appointment issued by Lord Cottenham were principally to point out the districts in which the county court judges were to act." The document was one of appointment, and also one to assign the district. As a document of appointment, why should any county court judge be exempted from the payment of the stamp on the appointment? See title "Grant" in the schedule of the Stamp Act. Then, as respects the assignment of the district, it is incorrect to say that the stamp duty would be payable upon the assignment of a new district. The County Court Act provides for the appointment, and also for the assignment of the district in which the judge is to act. The duty is payable in respect of the appointment as judge, not in respect of the assignment of the district; nor will any stamp duty be payable if a new district is assigned; and the assignment of a new district to a judge is especially provided for by the County Court Act—that is, to a person already appointed a judge, in respect of which appointment the duty is properly charged. ### A POINT FOR CONVEYANCERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 56, it is enacted, that "before any estate or interest shall be put up for sale under a decree or order of the Court of Chancery, an abstract of the title thereto shall, with the approbation of the Court, be laid before some conveyancing counsel to be approved of by the Court, for the opinion of such counsel thereon," &c.

By the prior act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, ss. 40, 41, it is enacted, that "it shall be lawful for the Court, or for any judge thereof when sitting at chambers, to receive and act upon the opinion of conveyancing counsel in actual practice, to be nominated as hereinafter mentioned, in all cases in which, according to the present practice of the Court and of the Master's office, it has been usual for the Master to require or receive the opinion of conveyancing counsel for his aid and assistance in the investigation of the title to an estate," &c.; and "that it be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to nominate any number of conveyancing counsel in actual practice, not less than six, who shall have practised as such for ten years at least, to be the conveyancing counsel upon whose opinion the Court, or any judge thereof, may act in any of the cases last before mentioned."

Two questions in particular arise under these clauses.

First, what is meant by the words "shall, with the approbation of the Court?" Is the direction imperative in all cases, even where the title to the estate sold is abundantly clear? If so, there is evidently a double expense incurred in fees to counsel.

Secondly, but a more important question to the conveyancer in practice is the following:—If the direction be imperative (as it would seem) in all cases, is the expression "some conveyancing counsel to be approved of by the Court" to be restricted to the conveyancing counsel appointed under stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80? We observe that many new cases for counsel's opinion on abstracts are created by stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 56, if the preliminary investigation of title be enforced on every sale; and these cases do not appear to be included in the words of stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, which define the business of which the conveyancing counsel appointed under that act are to enjoy a monopoly. It appears unjust to deprive the non-privileged conveyancers of their fair share of business going through the court, except by express enactment; and, taking the sections together, it does not appear to me that this express enactment has been made. My object in writing is to ask you and your readers if the point has been decided, or what is the practice, and I therefore decline to enter into any discussion of the law on the merits.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A CONVEYANCER.

5. No paid commissioner, secretary, or inspector to be appointed under this act shall be capable of sitting in the House of Commons during the tenure of his office.

6. The said commissioners to be appointed under this act shall be styled "The Charity Commissioners for England and Wales," and may have and use a seal for authenticating documents, and such commissioners shall sit from time to time as a board for carrying this act into execution; and any two of such commissioners may form a board, and may exercise all or any of the powers conferred on the commissioners or the board by this act.

7. The said board shall, by general minutes, from time to time prescribe regulations for their proceedings, and the proceedings of their inspectors, and concerning the form and manner of applications to the said board, and the conditions to be performed by applicants, and for the guidance of applicants in relation thereto, and all such general minutes shall be signed by three of the said commissioners at the least; and copies of all such general minutes shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days after the making thereof if Parliament be sitting, or if Parliament be not sitting, then within fourteen days after the next meeting thereof.

8. The said board shall cause minutes of their proceedings, and all orders, certificates, and schemes made or approved by them under this act, to be entered in books to be provided and kept for such purpose, and all such entries shall be signed by their secretary, and all copies purporting to be extracted from the books of the said board, and to be certified by their secretary, of any such minutes, orders, certificates, and schemes entered as aforesaid, shall be received as evidence of the proceedings to which such minutes shall relate, and of such orders, certificates, or schemes, and of the making or approval thereof (as the case may require) by the said board, without further proof thereof.

9. It shall be lawful for the said board from time to time, as they in their discretion may see fit, to examine and inquire into all or any charities in England or Wales, and the nature and objects, administration, management, and results thereof, and the value, condition, management, and application of the estates, funds, property, and income belonging thereto; and the said board may cause examinations and inquiries in relation to the matters aforesaid to be made and prosecuted by their inspectors, acting together or separately, in such cases and at such times as the said board may think fit; and all such inspectors shall from time to time report their proceedings to the said board.

10. The said board may require all trustees or persons acting or having any concern in the management or administration of any charity, or the estates, funds, or property thereof, to render to the said board, or to their inspectors, or either of them, accounts and statements in writing in relation to such charity, or the funds, estates, property, income, or monies thereof, or the administration, management, and application thereof, and may also require such trustees and persons to return answers in writing to any questions or inquiries addressed to them by the direction of the said board relating to the matters aforesaid.

11. All officers having the custody of enrolments, decrees, reports, records, and other documents relating to or concerning any charity shall furnish such copies or extracts as shall be required by the said board; and every inspector, secretary, and other officer of the said board for the time being employed for the purposes of this act shall be at liberty, by the authority and under the directions of the board, and subject to such regulations as the board may make in that behalf, to examine and search the registers and records of every court of law and equity, and every ecclesiastical court, and every public registry and office of records, and to take copies of and extracts from any decree or document recorded or registered or deposited therein respectively, for any purpose contemplated by this act, without fee or other payment in respect thereof.

12. Any inspector acting under the authority of the said board may, by precept under his hand, subject to such regulations as the said board may make in that behalf, require any person, being a trustee of any charity, or otherwise acting or having any concern in the management or administration of any charity, or of the estates, funds, or property thereof, or in the receipt or payment of the income or monies thereof, or deriving any income or stipend therefrom, to attend before such inspector for the purpose of being examined by him touching or relating to such charity, or the estates, funds, property, or income thereof, at any time and place mentioned or appointed by such precept, and to bring and produce any deed, paper, writing, instrument, or other document, being in the custody, possession, or power of such person, and relating to such charity, or the estates, funds, property, or income thereof, and may examine upon oath all persons attending in pursuance of such precept, and all persons voluntarily attending before him, and may administer such oath: provided always, that no person shall be obliged to travel in obedience to any such precept more than ten miles from his place of abode.

13. If any person wilfully give false evidence upon any examination under this act, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour.

14. If any person from whom the said board, or any inspector, is authorised to require any account or statement or answers to any questions or inquiries, or whose attendance any inspector is authorised to require, shall refuse or wilfully neglect to render to the said board such account or statement, or to make answers to such questions or inquiries, or to attend in obedience to any lawful precept of any inspector, or to give evidence before him, or shall wilfully alter, destroy, withhold, or refuse to produce any deed, paper, writing, instrument, or other document which may be lawfully required to be produced before any inspector of the said board, every person so offending shall be deemed and taken to have been guilty of a contempt of the High Court of Chancery, and shall be liable to be attached and committed by such Court on summary application by the commissioners to the same, and shall pay the costs of and attending such contempt as the said Court shall direct.

15. Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to give to the said board or their inspectors any power of requiring from any person holding or claiming to hold any property whatsoever adversely to any charity, or free or discharged from any charitable trust or charge, any information, or the production of any deed or document whatever in relation to the property so held or claimed adversely, or any charitable trust or charge alleged to affect the same.

16. The said board shall receive and consider all applications which may be made to them by any trustee or other person having any concern in the management or administration of any charity, for their opinion, advice, or direction respecting such charity, or the management or administration thereof, or the estates, funds, property, or income thereof, or the application thereof, or any question or dispute relating to the same respectively; and, if they so think fit, may, upon any such application, give such opinion or advice as they think expedient, subject to any judicial order or direction which may be subsequently made or given by any competent court or judge; and such opinion or advice shall be in writing, signed by two or more of the said commissioners, and sealed with the seal of the said commission; and every trustee and other person who shall act upon or in accordance with the opinion or advice given by the said board shall in respect of so acting be deemed and taken, so far as respects his own responsibility, to have acted in accordance with his trust; and no such judicial order or direction subsequently made or given by any court or judge shall have any such retrospective effect as to interfere with or impair the indemnity by this act given to trustees and other persons who have acted upon or in accordance with such opinion or advice of the said board: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to indemnify any trustee or other person for any act done in accordance with the opinion or advice of the said board, if such trustee or other person have been guilty of any fraud or wilful concealment or misrepresentation in obtaining such opinion or advice.

17. Before any suit, petition, or other proceeding (not being an application in any suit or matter actually pending) for obtaining any relief, order, or direction concerning or relating to any charity, or the estate, funds, property, or income thereof, shall be commenced, presented, or taken by any person whomsoever, there shall be transmitted by such person, to the said board, notice in writing of such proposed suit, petition, or proceeding, and such statement, information, and particulars as may be requisite or proper, or may be required from time to time by the said board, for explaining the nature and objects thereof; and the said board, if upon consideration of the circumstances they so think fit, may, by an order or certificate signed by their secretary, authorise or direct any suit, petition, or other proceeding to be commenced, presented, or taken with respect to such charity, either for the objects and in the manner specified or mentioned in such notice, or for such other objects, and in such manner and form, and subject to such stipulations or provisions for securing the charity against liability to any costs or expenses, and to such other stipulations or provisions for the protection or benefit of the charity, as the said board may think proper; and such board, if it seem proper to them, may, by such order or certificate as aforesaid, require and direct that any proceeding, so authorised by them in respect of any charity, shall be delayed during such period as shall seem proper to and shall be directed by such board; and every such order or certificate may be in such form and may contain such statements and particulars as such board shall think fit; and (save as herein otherwise provided) no suit, petition, or other proceeding for obtaining any such relief, order, or direction as last aforesaid shall be entertained or proceeded with by the Court of Chancery, or by any court or judge, except upon and in conformity with an order or certificate of the said board: provided always, that this enactment shall not extend to or affect any such petition or proceeding in which any person shall claim any property or seek any relief adversely to any charity.

18. Provided always, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty's Attorney-General acting ex officio to make such applications, and take and prosecute such proceedings with respect to any charity, in the Court of Chancery or otherwise, as to him may seem fit, as if this act had not been passed; and that nothing in this act contained shall be construed as dispensing with the fiat or allowance of her Majesty's Attorney-General with respect to any proceeding not being an application under the jurisdiction created by this act where such fiat or allowance was necessary before the passing of this act.

19. Provided also, that where upon any report of any inspector under this act or otherwise it appears to the said board that any suit, petition, or other proceeding concerning or relating to any charity, or the estate, funds, property, or income thereof, would be proper or expedient, it shall be lawful for the said board by their order to authorise or direct such suit, petition, or proceeding to be commenced, presented, or taken, and to give such directions in relation thereto as the said board may think proper; and thereupon such suit, petition, or proceeding may be commenced, presented, or taken accordingly, without any such previous notice in writing as hereinbefore mentioned; and the said board, before giving any such opinion, advice, or direction upon any such application as aforesaid, or making any such order or certificate after notice to them as aforesaid, may, where local inquiry appears to them to be requisite, cause such inquiry to be made by one of their inspectors; and the said board may, in any case where they see fit, before acting upon the report of any inspector, cause such report to be deposited for local inspection, and give notice of the same being so deposited, and consider any statements or objections which may be transmitted to them in relation thereto.

20. In any case in which it shall appear to the said board that the institution of legal proceedings is requisite or desirable with respect to any charity, or the estates, funds, property, or affairs thereof, and that under the circumstances thereof it is desirable that such proceedings should be instituted by the Attorney-General, it shall be lawful for the said board, if they so think fit, to certify such case, in writing under the hand of the secretary of the said board, to her Majesty's Attorney-General, together with such statements and particulars (if any) as in the opinion of the said board may be requisite or proper for the explanation of such case; and thereupon the said Attorney-General, if upon consideration of the circumstances he think fit, shall institute and prosecute such legal proceedings as he shall consider requisite or proper under the circumstances of such case, by information or petition in the Court of Chancery, or by application to a judge thereof at chambers, or to a district court of bankruptcy, or county court under the jurisdiction given by this act.

21. If in any case it appear to the trustees or persons for the time being acting in the administration or management of any charity, or the estates or property thereof, that any part of the charity lands or estates may be beneficially let on building, repairing, improving, or other leases, or on leases for working any mine, or that the digging for or raising of stone, clay, gravel, or other minerals, or the cutting of timber, would be for the benefit of the charity, or that it would be for the benefit of such charity that any new road or street should be formed or laid out, or any drains or sewers made through any part of the charity estates, or that any new building should be erected, or that any existing building should be repaired, altered, rebuilt, or wholly removed, or that any other improvements or alterations in the state or condition of the lands or estates of such charity should be made, it shall be lawful for such trustees or persons to lay before the said board a statement and proposal in relation to any of the matters aforesaid; and it shall be lawful for the said board, if they think that the leases or acts to which the statement and proposal relate (with or without modifications or alterations) would be beneficial to the charity, to make such order under their seal for and in relation to the granting of such leases, or the doing of any other such acts as aforesaid, and any circumstances connected therewith, as they may think fit, although such leases or acts respectively shall not be authorised or permitted by the trust; and the said board, by any such order, may authorise the application of any monies or funds belonging to the charity for any of the purposes or acts aforesaid, and, if necessary, may authorise the trustees to raise any sum of money by mortgage of all or any part of the charity estates; provided that compulsory provisions be reserved in every such mortgage for the payment of the principal money borrowed by annual instalments, and for the redemption and conveyance of the mortgaged estates, within the period of not more than thirty years.

22. It shall be lawful for the board, upon proof to their satisfaction that any schoolmaster or schoolmistress or other officer of any charity has been negligent in performing his or her duties, or that he or she is unfit or incompetent to discharge them properly, either from immoral conduct, age, or any other cause whatsoever, to empower the trustees of such charity to remove such schoolmaster or mistress or other officer, and to charge the salary of his or her successors, or any other portion of the revenues of the charity, with such retiring pension or allowance, if any, in favour of the person so removed, and generally to impose such conditions as to the said board shall appear proper: provided always, that where there shall be any special visitor of the charity, the consent of such visitor, in writing under his hand, shall be necessary in order to such removal.

23. If in any case it appear to the trustees or persons acting in the administration of any charity that any claim or demand or cause of suit against any person in relation to such charity may, with advantage to the charity, or should under the special circumstances of the case, be compromised or adjusted without taking or without continuing any proceedings at law or in equity, such trustees or persons may, or the person against whom such claim, demand, or cause of suit exists or is alleged to exist may, with the consent of the trustees or persons acting in the administration of such charity, submit to the said board a statement and proposal for such compromise or adjustment; and if it appear to the said board, after such inquiry in relation thereto by one of their inspectors as they may deem requisite or otherwise, that such proposal, either with or without any modification, is fit and proper, and for the benefit of the charity, it shall be lawful for the said board to make such order for and in relation to such compromise or adjustment as they may think fit; and upon the due performance of the terms and conditions of such compromise or adjustment as aforesaid, such agreement shall be a final bar to all actions, suits, claims, and demands by or on behalf of the charity concerned therein, in respect to the cause of action, suit, or matter in respect to which such compromise or adjustment shall have been made.

24. Upon application to the said board by the trustees or persons acting in the administration of any charity, representing to the said board, that under the special circumstances of any land belonging to the charity, a sale or exchange of such land can be effected on such terms as to increase the income of the charity, or would otherwise be advantageous to the charity, such board may, if they think fit, inquire into such circumstances, and if after inquiry they are satisfied that the proposed sale or exchange will be advantageous to the charity, may authorise the sale or exchange, and give such directions in relation thereto, and for securing the due investment of the money arising from any such sale, or by way of equality of exchange for the benefit of the charity, as they may think fit.

25. The said board shall have authority, upon such application as aforesaid, to authorise the sale to the owners of the land charged therewith of any rent-charge, annuity, or other periodical payment charged upon land, and payable to or for the benefit of any charity, or applicable to charitable purposes, upon such terms and conditions as they may deem beneficial to the charity, and to give such directions for securing the due investment of the money arising from such sale for the benefit of the charity, or for securing the due application thereof to such charitable purposes, as they may think fit; and in like manner the trustees of any charity, with the consent of the board, may purchase any rent-charge or other yearly payment to which the charity estate is or shall be liable.

26. The leases, sales, exchanges, and other transactions authorised by such board, under the powers of this act, shall have the like effect and validity as if they had been authorised or directed by the express terms of the trust affecting the charity.

27. Where any land shall be required for the erection or construction of any house or building, with or without garden, playground, or other appurtenances, for the purposes of any charity, and the trustees of the charity shall be legally authorised to purchase and hold such land, but by reason of the disability of any person having an estate or interest in such land, or of any defect in title thereto, a valid and perfect assurance of the same land cannot be made to the trustees of the charity in the ordinary manner, it shall be lawful for the trustees of the charity, with the sanction of the said board, (such sanction to be certified under the hand of their secretary), to take and purchase such land according to the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845; and for that purpose all the clauses and provisions of the last-mentioned act with respect to the purchase of lands by agreement, and with respect to the purchase money or compensation coming to parties having limited interests, or prevented from treating, or not making a title, and also with respect to conveyances of lands, so far as the same clauses and provisions respectively are applicable to the cases contemplated by this provision, shall be incorporated in this act; and in all cases contemplated by this provision, the expression "the special act," used in the said clauses and provisions of the said Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, shall be construed to mean this act; and the expression "the promoters of the undertaking," used in the same clauses and provisions, shall be construed to mean the trustees of the charity in question.

28. Where the appointment or removal of any trustee, or any other relief, order, or direction relating to any charity of which the gross annual income for the time being exceeds 30*l.*, shall be considered desirable, and such appointment, removal, or other relief, order, or direction might now be made or given by the Court of Chancery, in respect either of its ordinary or its special or statutory jurisdiction, or by the Lord Chancellor intrusted with the care and commitment of the custody of lunatics, it shall be lawful for any person authorised in this behalf by the order or certificate of the said board, or for the Attorney-General, to make application (without any information, bill, or petition) to the Master of the Rolls or one of the Vice-Chancellors, sitting at chambers, for such order, direction, or relief as the nature of the case may require; and the Master of the Rolls or the Vice-Chancellor to whom any such application shall be made shall and may proceed upon and dispose of such application in chambers, save where he may think fit otherwise to direct, and shall and may have and exercise thereupon all such jurisdiction, power, and authority, and make such orders and give such directions in relation to the matter of such application, as might now be exercised, made, or given by the Court of Chancery, or by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, in a suit regularly instituted, or upon petition, as the case may require; and the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively shall, in relation to such applications as aforesaid, and the proceedings thereon, (subject to any rules which may be made by the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of them or any two of them), have all such powers of directing matters to be heard in open court, and of ordering what matters shall be heard and investigated by themselves and their chief clerks respectively, and such other powers and authorities as by the act of the last session of Parliament [15 & 16 Vict. c. 80] are vested in or authorised to be exercised by them at chambers, and the provisions of the said act applicable to orders made by the Master of the Rolls or any of the Vice-Chancellors at chambers shall extend to all orders so made under this act: provided always, that, save as may be otherwise provided by any rules to be made by the Lord Chancellor, with such advice and consent as aforesaid, the determinations of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively upon and in relation to such applications as aforesaid shall not be subject to appeal in any case where the gross annual income of the charity does not exceed 100*l.*: provided also, that it shall be lawful for the Master of the Rolls or any Vice-Chancellor, where under the circumstances of any application, as aforesaid he may so see fit, to direct that for obtaining the relief, order, or direction sought for by such application, an information, bill, or petition, as the case may require, shall be filed or presented and prosecuted as now by law required, and to abstain from further proceeding on such application.

29. The jurisdiction created and given by this act to the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors sitting in chambers, upon any application to them respectively as aforesaid, shall extend concurrently to and may be exercised by the Chancellor of the duchy and county palatine of Lancaster and the Vice-Chancellor of the same county palatine respectively for the time being, as to every charity within the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery of the said county palatine whose gross annual income for the time being exceeds 30*l.*, upon application being made to such Chancellor or Vice-Chancellor respectively; and it shall be lawful for the Chancellor of the said duchy and county palatine, with the concurrence of the Vice-Chancellor of the same county palatine, from time to time to make and issue any rules and orders for regulating the modes of proceeding, and the fees to be taken in respect of proceedings under this act.

30. Provided always, that the provisions of this act applicable to any charity the gross annual income whereof exceeds 30*l.* shall extend to any charity established or administered or applicable to or for objects or purposes within the city of London the gross annual income whereof does not exceed 30*l.*, in like manner as if such income exceeded that amount.

31. It shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors, or any two of them, to make and issue general rules and orders for regulating the mode and form of applications at the chambers of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively under this act, and the proceedings thereon, and for determining in what cases and under what conditions and restrictions the determinations of the Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellors respectively upon or in relation to such applications shall be subject to appeal, and the fees and allowances to solicitors of the Court of Chancery, and the fees to be payable in money or by stamps to the officers of the said court in respect of such applications and proceedings thereon; and such rules and orders may from time to time be varied by the like authority, and all such rules and orders shall be deemed general orders of the said court.

32. Where any charity of which the gross annual income for the time being does not exceed 30*l.* shall be established or administered or be applicable wholly or partially to or for objects or purposes within the district, or any two or more of the districts, of any district court of bankruptcy or of any county court or courts holden under the act of the session holden in the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, and the appointment or removal of any trustee, or any other relief, order, or direction whatsoever concerning such charity, shall be considered desirable, and such appointment or removal, or other relief, order, or direction, might now be made or given by the Court of Chancery in respect either of its ordinary or its special or statutory jurisdiction, or by the Lord Chancellor intrusted with the care and commitment of the custody of lunatics, it shall be lawful for any person authorised in this behalf by the order or certificate of the said board, or for the Attorney-General, to make application to such district or county court, or, as the case may be, to any one of such district or county courts, for such order, direction, or relief as the nature of the case may require; and such district or county court shall entertain such application, and shall hear the matter in open court, and shall give such relief, and make such orders and directions in relation to the matter of such application, as might now be made or given by the Court of Chancery, or by the Lord Chancellor intrusted as aforesaid, in a suit regularly instituted, or upon petition, as the case may require; and the clerk of such county court shall transmit a copy of such order or direction to the office in London of the registrar of county courts judgments, to be there enrolled: provided always, that no judge of any district or county court shall be authorised to vary any decree, order, or direction of the Court of Chancery, or of any judge thereof, or to make or give any order or direction inconsistent or conflicting with any such decree, order, or direction: provided also, that where two or more district or county courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with respect to any charity under this act, no application in respect of such charity shall be made to or entertained by more than one of such district or county courts at the same time.

33. The jurisdiction hereby created and conferred on the county courts with respect to any charity shall not be exercised by any deputy or other person who may for the time being be appointed to sit and shall be sitting for any such judge.

34. Where two or more district courts of bankruptcy or county courts shall concurrently have jurisdiction under this act with respect to any charity, it shall be lawful for the said board to order to which of such courts any application with respect to such charity shall be made; and every such order shall be conclusive as to the jurisdiction with respect to the application referred to in such order.

35. It shall be lawful for the said board to direct that any application as to any charity within the jurisdiction of any district court of bankruptcy or county court shall be made before a judge of the Court of Chancery, or as to any charity within the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster, either before the Chancellor or the Vice-Chancellor of the same county palatine, or before a judge of the High Court of Chancery, according to the provisions herein contained applicable to a charity the gross annual income whereof exceeds 30*l.*, and in such case such application shall be made and may be heard and determined accordingly, in like manner as if the gross annual income of such charity exceeded 30*l.*; and upon the production of the order or certificate containing such direction, or of a copy thereof, the application with respect to which such order or certificate shall have been made shall not be entertained or proceeded with by such district or county court.

36. Whenever any order or decision is made by any district court of bankruptcy or county court for the appointment or removal of any trustee of any charity, or approving of any scheme for regulating or directing the administration of any charity, or the estate, funds, property, or income thereof, a copy of every such order or decision shall immediately upon the making thereof be delivered or transmitted by the deputy registrar of such district court or by the clerk of the county court, as the case may be, together with all requisite particulars, to the said board, for the purpose of being considered by them; and no such order or decision shall be valid or effectual until the same shall have been approved by the said board, such approval to be testified by a certificate in writing, signed by the secretary of the said board, and no such approval shall issue from the said board until one calendar month shall have elapsed after the receipt by the board of such copy and particulars.

37. In case any such order or decision as last aforesaid of any district court of bankruptcy or county court shall not be approved by the said board, it shall be lawful for such board to remit the same for reconsideration and decision by such district or county court, with such remarks and recommendations thereon (if any) as shall seem fit and expedient to such board, or, in the discretion of the board, to order and direct that the subject-matter to which such order or decision relates, together with such order or decision, shall be submitted to the consideration and decision of a judge of the Court of Chancery, and in such last-mentioned case no further proceedings shall be had or taken in the district or county court with respect to the matter in question; and in case the order or decision of the district or county court, on the reconsideration of any order or decision so remitted for reconsideration, be disapproved as aforesaid by the said board, such board shall refer such orders and decisions, and the subject-matter thereof, to a judge of the Court of Chancery, or, as to any charity within the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster, either to the Chancellor or the Vice-Chancellor of the same county palatine, or to a judge of the High Court of Chancery; and where any order or decision is referred to a judge of the Court of Chancery, or of the Court of Chancery of the said county palatine of Lancaster, under this provision, such judge shall have and exercise all such jurisdiction, power, and authority in relation thereto as in the case of a charity the gross annual income whereof exceeds 30*l.*, and may make such order in relation to the matter of such order or decision as to him may seem proper.

38. Subject to any orders to be made by the Lord Chancellor as hereinafter mentioned, and to the other provisions of this act, all proceedings to be taken in any district court of bankruptcy or county court, and all orders and directions to be made or given by any such district court or county court by virtue of the jurisdiction hereby created and conferred on such court, shall respectively be subject to the same rules and regulations, and have the same effect, and be registered, enforced, and executed in the same manner, as the other proceedings, orders, judgments, and directions of the same court under its ordinary jurisdiction, and it shall be lawful for any such district court, or for any county court, with the consent of the board, to rescind or vary any order which shall have been previously made by such court, without prejudice to any act or matter in the meantime done under such order; and for executing and putting in force any order to be made by any county court under this act, every judge of any such court shall and may have and exercise all such powers as by the act of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, are given for enforcing the payment of any debt, damages, or costs under the said act.

LONDON, OCTOBER 29, 1853.

ON the eve of the meeting of the lawyers for the transaction of the business of the coming year, we will address ourselves to a few points which, in the present state of transition, are of importance as well to the Profession as to the public. The first is the state of the pecuniary relations between lawyers and their clients—that is, between solicitors and the public, and between counsel and their immediate clients, the solicitors. Nothing can possibly be in a more unhealthy state, or in a state less in harmony with the other existing relations of business.

Solicitors, it is true, have certain fixed charges, which they are authorised to make for their labour, and the law and custom of the Profession also allow them to enforce payment of their claims, just as any other man of business may enforce his claim for a just demand. But, unfortunately, it is well known to be a custom prevailing to an enormous extent between solicitors and their clients, and so general as to make it difficult to avoid it, to extend credit to a degree quite irreconcilable with the customary usages, as to credit, of any commercial business—quite irreconcilable with the due discharge by the solicitor, unless he is a man of fortune, of his general engagements, and more particularly of those engagements under which he is brought in his relations with counsel.

Counsel, on the other hand, are still, in this our thoroughly commercial and business-like age, fettered by the fiction of their fees being an honorarium—a gift of gratitude; instead of being, what they really are, a quid pro quo—a remuneration for business done. It might be well in the days of the Roman Bar, and it might be well in the days of the earlier Bar of this country, when few, if any, but men of independent fortune, and some rank, ever thought of going to the Bar, and when the selection of the Bar, as a pursuit, by younger brothers, was made quite as much for the purpose of strengthening family influence, by the exercise of the protection of a patron, as for the purpose of pecuniary return—it might, we say, be well then to adopt and act upon the principle of the honorarium as between patron and client. But all that has long—very long—ceased. The barrister of this age is simply a man learned in the law, or skilled as an advocate, or both, who exercises his profession to live by it—to rise by it if he can, but primarily to live by it; and who no more dreams of being simply a patron, than a soldier thinks of fighting without pay. In that state of things, the quiddam honorarium theory is a mere theory—unsubstantial—based on no existing usage—not even based on any existing faith; and the time has come, or is coming, when it ought to be abolished.

The change on these points that is requisite is, that solicitors should greatly contract the credit they give to their clients; and that, as to the Bar, first, the notion of an honorarium should be scattered to the winds, and the remuneration of counsel should be a claim legally enforceable, like any other claim, for services performed; and, secondly, that on their part, the credit given by the Bar to their immediate clients should be also greatly contracted.

The next point relates more peculiarly to the pecuniary relation between the Bar and their clients. Pleadings being, both at common law and in equity, reduced to almost nothing (we speak, of course, of averages) in point of length, briefs are correspondingly reduced in size. But every pleader knows that the difficulty of drawing is rather increased, and every advocate knows that the difficulty of reading and arguing a brief is not diminished; yet the quiddam honorarium remains still as of old, regulated principally by the length. This is absurd and unjust, and cannot long be borne, even by so meek a body as the Bar, and it requires remedy.

We have long entertained, and we believe we have before this ventilated, and we now openly urge, the idea, that the true way to remedy the evil would be to abolish altogether the etiquette of uniformity of fees—that is, the notion that a fee of — guineas, whatever it may be, for any given piece of business, is the proper fee, less than which no one ought to take—more than which no one ought to demand. We suggest that it should be the usage for every barrister to mark his own fees, according to his own estimate, founded upon his own judgment and observation, of his own value to the public.

There would be no danger of very excessive fees or very low fees being marked. A sense of fairness, and if not that, a sense of his own interest, would prevent any man from going to either extreme. And this at any rate would be prevented—the frequent compulsory acceptance of a remuneration quite inadequate for the labour bestowed, and, on the other hand, the occasional disbursement by the client of fees quite out of proportion to the rank and ability of the recipient, and the amount of intellectual exertion required from him. We are well aware that this suggestion is not likely at first to be very popular. It may be not the less sound. We do not, however, cling to it, if a better can be made; but we do cling to the assertion, that the present system is both ridiculous and unjust.

Another point, and this regards more the interest of the public than of either branch of the Profession, is this—whether pleaders at common law being exterminated, and equity pleaders, as such, nearly so, it would not be convenient to the public to restore to them the advantage of conferences, at pleader's fees. At present, as is well known, no counsel can give his client a conference for less than a guinea fee. It is also well known, that in the multiplicity of business now transacted at railway speed, questions are continually occurring in which counsel's verbal opinion is required, but which are too frequent and too small to bear the expense of an ordinary conference. The suitor must, therefore, go without it. What we should suggest is, that, having regard to the nature of the business now done, and the whole system of business, the suitors would be much benefited if the junior Bar relaxed its guinea rule as to conferences, and gave conferences on short points, at pleader's fees.

We have thus touched openly and in plain terms upon points hitherto held too sacredly delicate to be more than hinted at. But this is not an age for preserving fictions, or for talking of business in other than plain and business-like terms; and if we shall have called attention to the remedying of some serious evils, we shall be satisfied.

PUBLIC GENERAL STATUTES.

39. Where any person authorised to make any application under this act, (other than her Majesty's Attorney-General acting ex officio), or any other person who may have been made a party to any proceeding upon any application under this act, is aggrieved by or dissatisfied with any order made by any district court of bankruptcy or county court upon any such application, or any proceeding thereon, he may, within one calendar month after the making of such order, give notice in writing to the said court, and also to the said board, that he is desirous to appeal against the same; and if the said board think it reasonable and proper that such appeal should be entertained, and give a certificate to that effect, such district or county court shall suspend any proceedings upon the order appealed against during such time as the circumstances may require; and the said board, if they so think fit, may require the person giving any such notice of appeal to become bound with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by the deputy registrar of such district court, or by the clerk of the county court, as the case may be, to the treasurers of the said courts respectively, or such other person as the said board may see fit, in such sum as to the said board shall seem reasonable, to pay such costs of the proceedings on the appeal as shall be ordered to be paid by such appellant, and also (if the said board so think fit) to indemnify the charity against the costs and expenses of or attending such appeal; and every bond executed under this provision shall be exempt from stamp duty: provided always, that it shall be lawful for her Majesty's Attorney-General, (acting ex officio), at any time within three calendar months after the making of any order by a district court or county court under this act, to lodge and commence and prosecute an appeal against such order, without giving any such notice or becoming bound as aforesaid, and every such last-mentioned appeal shall thereupon be allowed by the order of such district or county court, and shall have such other effect as any other appeal under this act.

40. Where any order allowing an appeal has been made as aforesaid, the person thereby allowed to appeal shall within three calendar months present a petition to the Court of Chancery, setting forth the order appealed against, and the order allowing such appeal, and praying such relief as the case may require; and upon the hearing of such petition the Court may confirm, vary, or reverse the order appealed against, or may remit such order to the district court of bankruptcy or county court by which the same was made, with or without any declaration or directions of the Court of Chancery in relation thereto, or may proceed, in relation to the charity to which such order relates, as in the case of an application under this act to a judge of the Court of Chancery at chambers, and any judge of such court sitting at chambers or in open court may make or give any such orders or directions in relation to the matter of such order as he may see fit, or the Court may make such other order in relation to the matter of any such appeal as to the Court may seem just, and as might be made in the case of a suit regularly instituted, or a petition, as the case may require; and in case the party allowed to appeal do not within such three calendar months present such petition of appeal, the order against which such appeal was allowed shall be final; and in case any costs adjudged on any such appeal to be paid by the party allowed to appeal be not paid, such bond as aforesaid may be put in suit, and the money to be recovered on every such bond shall be applied to indemnify the charity estate or the person damaged, or otherwise in such manner as the justice of the case may require, and the court or judge by whom such appeal may have been heard shall think fit.

41. Provided always, that no judge of the Court of Chancery, nor any district court of bankruptcy or county court, shall upon any proceedings under this act have jurisdiction to try or determine the title at law or in equity to any real or personal property, or any term or interest therein, as between any charity, or the trustee thereof, and any person holding or claiming such real or personal property, term, or interest adversely to such charity, or to try or determine any question as to the existence or extent of any charge or trust.

42. Before any application shall be made to any judge of the Court of Chancery, or to any district court of bankruptcy or county court, under any of the provisions herein contained, for the establishment or alteration of a scheme or the appointment or removal of any trustees or trustee, notice in writing of such intended application shall be given in such form and manner as the said board shall have directed; and if the order be that such notice be affixed to or near the door of any parish or district church, the incumbent and churchwardens of such parish or district are hereby respectively required to allow such notice to be affixed and to remain so affixed during such period, not less than fifteen days, as the said board shall have ordered; and in any case in which the order shall be that such notice shall be affixed to any place, evidence that the same has been so affixed shall be deemed and taken as prima facie evidence that it has remained affixed during the period prescribed by the board.

43. Every application to any judge or court under the jurisdiction created or conferred by any of the provisions of this act may be made by her Majesty's Attorney-General, or, subject to the provisions aforesaid, by all or any one or more of the trustees or persons administering or claiming to administer, or interested in, the charity which shall be the subject of such application, or any two or more inhabitants of any parish or place within which the charity is administered or applicable; and it shall be lawful for her Majesty's Attorney-General for the time being, acting ex officio, to make application by petition to the Court of Chancery with respect to any charity under the provisions of the act 52 Geo. 3, c. 101, or under the provisions of any act or acts passed or to be passed authorising the application to the same court by petition according to the provisions of the said act.

44. For the purposes of determining the jurisdiction under his act with respect to any charity, or the right to appeal from the determination of a judge of the Court of Chancery, it shall be lawful for the said board to declare, according to such judgment as they may be able to form upon the returns or statements before them in relation to any charity, whether the gross annual income for the time being of such charity does or does not exceed 30*l.* or 100*l.*, (as the case may require), and a statement in any certificate or order of the said board, that according to such judgment as aforesaid the gross yearly income of any charity does or does not exceed 30*l.* or 100*l.*, shall be sufficient evidence of the amount of the gross annual income of such charity, for the purpose of determining such jurisdiction or right to appeal as aforesaid; and any certificate or order made by the said board under this act, authorising any proceeding or application concerning any charity to be taken or made to any district court of bankruptcy or county court, or to the Court of Chancery, or any judge thereof, shall state that the gross annual income for the time being of such charity does not exceed 30*l.*, or does exceed 30*l.* (as the case may be): provided always, that where any charity, or the trustees thereof, in addition to the principal endowment for its general objects and purposes, shall be possessed of or entitled to any other endowment for any particular or special object or purpose arising out of, or in its nature or application connected with, the general objects or purposes of such charity, it shall be lawful for the said board, having regard to the circumstances of each such case, and to the object and extent of the proposed application and litigation, to determine whether such endowment for such particular or special object or purpose should, for the purposes of jurisdiction and proceedings under this act, be considered and treated as forming part of the general endowment of the charity, or as a separate or independent charity, and such board shall frame their certificate or order accordingly.

45. The Lord Chancellor shall make such orders for regulating proceedings by and before the judges of district courts of bankruptcy and county courts under this act, and for fixing and determining the fees to be taken in respect of such proceedings, as he may see fit; and, subject to such orders, such judges may regulate the proceedings before them respectively so as to render them as summary and inexpensive as conveniently may be.

46. Nothing herein contained shall diminish or detract from any right or privilege which by any rule or practice of the Court of Chancery, or by the construction of law, now subsists for the preference or the exclusive or special benefit of the Church of England, or the members of the same church, in settling any scheme for the regulation of any charity, or in the appointment or removal of trustees, or generally in the application or management of any charity.

47. The secretary for the time being of the said board shall, by virtue of his appointment, be the treasurer of public charities; and such treasurer shall, for the purposes of taking, holding, conveying, assigning, transferring, and transmitting real property, including leaseholds for lives or years, be a corporation sole by the name of "The Treasurer of Public Charities," and by that name shall have perpetual succession, and plead and be impleaded before all courts, justices, and others.

48. Where any land, or any term or estate therein, holden upon trust for any charity, shall be vested in any persons other than the persons acting in the administration and application of the rents; or where there shall be no trustees thereof, or the trustees, or any of them, shall be unwilling to act, or it shall be uncertain in whom such land, term, or estate shall be vested, or all or any of the persons in whom such land, term, or estate shall be vested, cannot be found, or shall be under age, lunatic, or of unsound mind, (whether found by such inquisition or not), or otherwise incapable of acting, or shall be out of the jurisdiction or not amenable to the process of the Court of Chancery; or where, by reason of the reduced number of trustees, or other causes, a valid appointment of new trustees cannot be made; or where, by reason of the expenses incident to the appointment of new trustees, and the conveyance or assignment of such land, term, or estate to such new trustees, it shall appear to the Court of Chancery, or to any judge of such court, or of any court having jurisdiction with respect to such charity under this act, desirable so to do, such court or judge may order that such land, term, or estate be vested in such treasurer, and thereupon the same shall vest in such treasurer and his successors for all the estate and interest holden in trust for the charity as aforesaid, without any conveyance or assurance thereof; but no such vesting order as aforesaid shall be made in respect of any land or term or estate as aforesaid, holden in trust as aforesaid, vested in a corporation, without the consent of the corporation; and no such vesting order shall take effect in respect of any copyhold land without the consent of the lord of the manor; and the Court of Chancery, or such judge, may direct such periodical or other payment, as such court or judge may think fit, to be made to the lord of the manor, in compensation for fines or other profits which would have become due upon death or admittance of tenants.

49. It shall be lawful for any court or judge by whom respectively any such vesting order may have been made, or for any other court or judge having jurisdiction in the matter, if it shall so seem fit to such court or judge, from time to time to order that all or any part of the land, term, or estate, which shall for the time being be vested in the said treasurer by virtue of any such vesting order as aforesaid, shall be devested, and that the same shall be vested in the acting trustees or trustee for the time being of the charity; and such last-mentioned order shall operate to vest such land, term, and estate in the trustees or trustee therein named, without any conveyance or assurance.

50. Subject to the orders and directions of the Court of Chancery, or of any such judge, such treasurer shall be deemed a bare trustee, and shall permit the persons acting in the administration of the charity to have the possession, management, and control of the trust estates, and the application of the income thereof, as if the same had been vested in them.

51. The secretary for the time being of the said board, and such other public officer or officers as the Lord Chancellor shall appoint, shall be official trustees of charitable funds, and where trustees or other persons having in their names, or in the name of any deceased person of whom they are representatives, in the books of the Bank of England, or of the East India or South Sea Company, or of any other public company, any annuities, stock, or shares, or holding any government or parliamentary or other securities in trust for any charity, shall be desirous to transfer or deposit the same to or with the said official trustees in trust for such charity; or where any persons shall be desirous of transferring or depositing as aforesaid any annuities, stocks, shares, or securities for discharging any legacy or charge given or made to or for the benefit of any charity; or where it shall appear to the Court of Chancery, or to any judge of such court, or of any district court of bankruptcy, or county court having jurisdiction under this act, that any annuities, stock, shares, or securities held in trust for any charity ought, for the purpose of security or convenient administration, to be transferred or deposited as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such court or judge to order the transfer or deposit of such annuities, stock, shares, or securities to or with such official trustees.

52. The secretary of the said board shall keep separate accounts of the annuities, stock, shares, and securities belonging to each separate charity, and the said official trustees shall pay the dividends or interest or income thereof to the trustees or persons acting in the administration of such charity, or otherwise dispose thereof, and transfer such annuities, stock, shares, or securities, (when occasion shall require), as the Court of Chancery, or any judge of such court, or of any district court of bankruptcy, or county court having jurisdiction under this act, or other lawful authority, shall direct.

53. It shall be lawful for any trustees or other persons having the custody of any deeds or muniments of or relating to such charity to deposit the same for security in a repository which may be provided by the said board, subject to any regulations to be made by the said board under this act.

54. Where, upon the application of any trustees or other persons concerned in the management or administration of any charity, or interested in the benefits thereof, (and after such examination or inquiry as the board may think necessary in relation thereto), or upon any report of an inspector, or information otherwise obtained by the said board under this act, with relation to any charity, it shall appear to the said board to be desirable to have a new scheme for the application or management of the charity, and such new scheme as contemplated or considered desirable by the board cannot be, or it shall in the opinion of the board be doubtful whether it can be, carried into complete effect by the Court of Chancery, or by any district or county court under the jurisdiction created by this act, or otherwise than by the authority of Parliament, it shall be lawful for the said board in every such case provisionally to approve and certify such new scheme in the manner and subject to the regulations hereinafter mentioned.

55. One month at least before any such new scheme shall be so provisionally approved, notice thereof shall be given in such manner as the board may in each case consider proper or expedient for insuring due publicity, and every such notice shall contain such particulars of the proposed scheme as the said board think fit, and as shall be deemed by the said board sufficient to shew the nature of such scheme; and where the nature thereof cannot conveniently be shewn in the said notice, such notice shall refer to some convenient place within the parish or district, and to the office in London of the Registrar of County Courts Judgments, where a copy of the proposed scheme shall be deposited and may be inspected, and every such notice shall require any objections to such scheme to be stated or transmitted to the said board or their secretary within one month from the time when the notice shall have been given.

56. If after such notice as aforesaid any objections or suggestions shall be made, the board shall consider the same, and may thereupon, if to them it shall seem fit, alter or modify the scheme according to any such objections or suggestions; and after all such objections and suggestions, if any, have been disposed of, or if no such objections or suggestions shall have been made, the board, in case they shall not think fit to refer such scheme to an inspector under the provision next hereinafter contained, may proceed to approve such scheme, and to certify the same in manner hereinafter mentioned.

57. Upon the requisition of any person interested in the charity in question, (in case the said board, after due consideration, shall be of opinion that there are sufficient grounds for complying with such requisition), or in any other case, if the said board shall consider it desirable, the matter of any scheme in question may be referred by the said board to one of their inspectors, and such inspector shall thereupon proceed to make a local inquiry and examination into the matter of the scheme in question; and for the purposes of such inquiry such inspector may hold a sitting or sittings in some convenient place in the parish, or one of the parishes, or the district to or in which respectively the charity in question is wholly or partially situated or is administered, and may take and receive any evidence and information, and hear and inquire into any objections or questions relating to the scheme or charity in question, and may from time to time adjourn any such sitting, and public notice shall be given by such inspector of every such sitting (except an adjourned sitting) fourteen days at the least before the holding thereof, in such other mode as in the judgment of the said board shall be sufficient to insure publicity.

58. Every inspector to whom any such matter shall be referred shall report in writing to the said board the result of his inquiry, and whether in his opinion the scheme in question should be approved with or without any alteration or modification thereof, and such report shall specify or indicate the alterations (if any) which such inspector shall consider desirable, with the reasons for the same, and also the nature of the objections (if any) which shall have been made to the scheme, and the opinion of the said inspector thereon, and the said board shall consider such report, and if, as the result of such report or after further inquiry, they shall be satisfied therewith, they may proceed to approve the scheme in question either with or without any alteration, and to certify the same in manner hereinafter mentioned.

59. Every scheme to be approved by the said board shall be certified by them, and for that purpose shall be embodied in a certificate to be made by the said board, and sealed with their seal; and in every case a copy of such certificate shall be deposited in some convenient place within the parish or one of the parishes or the district in which the charity in question shall wholly or partially be situated or administered, and at the office in London of the Registrar of County Courts Judgments, and a notice shall also be given, in such manner as the board shall direct, which notice shall refer to the certificate so deposited, and shall state the intention of the board to proceed with the scheme thereby certified.

60. LONDON, NOVEMBER 5, 1853.

It seems to have been thought by many that the New Stamp Act, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, has imposed some extraordinary obligations upon the receiving class of the public, and has exposed them to new penalties for giving an unstamped receipt, or for refusing to give a stamped one on demand. The fact is, however, that the penalties which now exist for these offences have existed since the stats. 35 Geo. 3, c. 55, and 43 Geo. 3, c. 126: by the former, any person who writes or signs a receipt that is not properly stamped is liable to a penalty of 10*l.*, (sect. 8); and by the latter, any person who shall have paid money, for the receipt of which a stamped receipt ought to have been given, may provide such receipt, and demand of the person to whom the payment was made, a receipt for the money paid and the amount of the duty. (Sect. 5). In case of refusal the penalty is 10*l.* (See Laing v. Meader, 1 Car. & P. 257; Richardson v. Jackson, 8 M. & W. 298). The new statute makes no difference in this respect, except that as it fixes the minimum sum requiring a receipt stamp at 2*l.*, instead of at 5*l.*, and as it applies the old stamp laws to its own provisions, the above penalties will now attach upon receipts for the reduced sum of 2*l.* The act is decidedly favourable to the public, diminishing the amount of duties upon several instruments of very common use, and tending to promote general convenience. The duty henceforth upon all receipts, and on drafts or orders for the payment of any sum of money to the bearer or to order on demand, will be 1*d.*, and may be denoted by a stamp impressed upon the paper, or by an adhesive stamp affixed thereto. In the latter case, before the instrument is delivered out of the hands of the person giving it, he is to obliterate the stamp by writing thereon his name or initials; and unless this be done bonâ fide, he is liable to a penalty of 10*l.* Other provisions are made against the fraudulent removal or second user of such stamp. As a general rule, the receipt contemplated by the act is that which is given upon payment of a pre-existing debt; (Taylor v. Steele, 16 M. & W. 665); and we find express exemption of receipts given for money deposited in any bank or in the hands of any banker to be accounted for, whether with interest or not, provided the same is not expressed to be received by the hands of any other than the person to whom the same is to be accounted for; but the exemption is not to extend to receipts for sums paid or deposited for letters of allotment of shares, or in respect of calls upon shares, which last-mentioned receipts, by whomsoever given, are to be liable to the penny duty. (Sects. 3—5, and Schedule, tit. “Receipt”). The latter clause seems to have been introduced in consequence of the decision in Clarke v. Chaplin, (1 Exch. 26; 4 Exch. 403). We have said that the sum for which a receipt stamp is necessary now commences at 2*l.*; and it may here be observed, that formerly there was a duty of 2*d.* on receipts for sums from 2*l.* to 5*l.* That was altered by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 23, and then the duty of 3*d.* was imposed for sums from 5*l.* to 10*l.*, and in proportion for larger amounts. Receipts may be stamped within fourteen days after they have been given or bear date, on payment of 5*l.*; beyond fourteen days, and within a month, on payment of 10*l.*; and afterwards not at all. (35 Geo. 3, c. 55, s. 11).

VOL. XVII.

With regard to "drafts or orders for the payment of money to the bearer or order on demand," which were formerly classed in the stamp code under bills of exchange and promissory notes, and liable to an ad valorem duty, they are now chargeable at the uniform rate of one penny. Letters of credit are included under the above term, unless sent by persons in the United Kingdom to persons abroad, authorising drafts on the United Kingdom. Drafts upon bankers heretofore exempt are still exempted—namely, when drawn payable to bearer on demand upon persons acting as bankers within fifteen miles of the place where they are issued, such place to be specified on the draft, which is also to bear date on or before the day of its issue, and is not to direct payment by bills or notes. (9 Geo. 4, c. 49, s. 15). As to penalties for frauds under colour of this exemption, see 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 13.

It will be a great convenience hereafter to be able to transmit cheques by post, making them payable to order, and affixing a penny stamp thereon, by which means they will be negotiable only by the indorsement of the payee. And here we must notice a very important clause, strangely introduced into the act, being rather the subject of general than of stamp law, by which any draft or order drawn upon a banker for money payable to order on demand, which when presented purports to be indorsed by the person to whom the same shall be drawn payable, shall be sufficient authority to the banker to pay the bearer; and it shall not be incumbent upon such banker to prove that such indorsement, or any subsequent indorsement, was made by the person to whom the draft was made payable by the drawer or any indorser. (Sect. 19). The law is well settled, that in cases not within this saving clause, bankers paying a forged indorsement, purporting to be that of a customer, must bear the loss. (See Roberts v. Tucker, 15 Jur., part 1, p. 987; 20 L. J., Q. B., 270).

We must defer until our next article the consideration of the remaining sections, which relate to stamp duties in respect of the following subjects:—1. Articles of clerkship to attornies, in order to admission in any of the courts of the counties palatine. 2. Bonds and mortgages given by public companies, and the transfer thereof. 3. Conveyances of estates, subject to any debt to be afterwards paid by the purchaser, or where the consideration is a rent-charge or annuity made subject to redemption or repurchase. 4. Counterparts of leases. 5. Inventories of personal estate in Scotland of deceased persons. 6. Licenses to clergymen to perform divine service. 7. Life insurance. And 8. Playing cards. Provision is also made for obtaining the opinion of the Commissioners at Somerset House whether any stamp is required, as well as to the particular stamp required, which was provided for by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97; for facilitating the purchase of postage-stamps; for obtaining allowance for stamps rendered useless by the act; and for exempting officers of the Inland Revenue from serving as mayor or sheriff, or in any corporate, parochial, or other public office, or on a jury, or in the militia.

It should be observed that the act came into force on the 10th of last month, (10th October, 1853), and by the 1st section it is not to repeal or alter any of the stamp duties payable in relation to any instrument signed or executed by any party thereto, or which bears date before or upon that day.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 12, 1853.

DURING the last week one of the law publishers engaged in the publication of the authorised reports of proceedings in the Courts of Equity, has announced his intention to issue the reports intrusted to him for publication, at half the usual price; and it is believed that two other sets of the equity reports will be immediately published on the same footing. We take this commencement of change in the system of publishing reports, as an occasion to give the Profession a little information on the machinery of reporting and publishing reports, in order that they may judge whether the present system can be made to work thoroughly well, or whether any and what alteration in kind should be made; the alteration at present about to be attempted, being one of degree, and not of kind.

Reporting, as at present conducted, is a matter of literary and publishing speculation; as such, one of its fundamental principles is quantity. There must, as a matter of fact, be a certain quantity published in each year, otherwise neither author nor publisher can "make enough," to use a common and well-understood term, to compensate the one for the consumption of his time, the other for the employment of his capital.

It is idle to talk, as some very high-minded barristers, not having much considered the subject, will talk, about its being the duty of reporters carefully to contract the bulk of their productions; and about its being a very shameful thing for publishers to issue such thick books as they do. Let any one look through the series of reports for the last twenty-five years, and he will find as a fact, that a certain average quantity has always been collected and published in every year by every reporter, including among the number men who have since graced the judgment seat; and let him also reflect a little upon the theory of this production; and he will see, that if half of each year's production had been eliminated, a book of half the size could only have borne half the price, and that in such a result neither author nor publisher could have found that amount of return which would have been esteemed by him adequate. Now, let us not be misunderstood: we are far from imputing to reporters, either regular or irregular, a wilful extension or dilation of matter, for the mere purpose of thickening a volume; but what we mean is, that a certain return must be obtained to make it worth while for either author or publisher to labour. To obtain that return, a certain price, having regard to the circulation, must be obtained; and, to justify that price, quantity in some form must exist. There must either be long cases or a great many cases; but quantity somehow is indispensable, speaking of reporting as a literary speculation.

It is inevitable; it may be found fault with; it may be stigmatised as careless—as shameful; it may be designated by any other opprobrious epithets, but inevitable it is*. This, then, is the fundamental vice of the existing system of reporting, which the present movement in the direction of cheapness, however beneficial in other respects, will not remove. The Profession will have their reports cheaper, but certainly not less lengthy. More lengthy, it has been observed sarcastically, they cannot well be; at any rate, they are not very likely to be so, for the very same commercial reasons that they are not likely to diminish, viz. that a very large book is as unprofitable as a very small one. Of the fact there is no doubt, though the exact reasons for it may be not easily fathomed.

But besides the inevitable vice of quantity, so long as the publication of the authorised reports is a matter of private speculation, there is another fault to which they are prone, viz. the publication of cases of insufficient importance. This results, not from any disposition to swell the bulk of a volume, but from the necessity of competing with other publications, such as this Journal, the Law Journal, and even the Law Times. Now, while there are thus in each court at least three reporters besides the authorised reporter of the court, it follows that there will be three opinions besides his, as to what ought and what ought not to be reported; and as the Bar, and even the Bench, always like a case, if they can get one, to save themselves the trouble of giving an opinion founded on principle, it follows, that if the authorised reporter chooses to be very fastidious, and to exclude cases because he thinks them of insufficient importance, he finds the utility of his productions questioned, and their popularity diminished.

Hence he must report a great many cases, which, if free to exercise his own judgment, he might reject as too trivial. How this defect is to be remedied we are not at present called upon to suggest; it is an inevitable concomitant of free trade in reporting, and must subsist so long as the reporter of the court is almost as much dependent on public favour, as every other reporter.

Let it be well understood that we are here offering no opinion whether the reporter of the court ought or ought not to be placed in a position of greater independence of popularity as an author; we only say, that if the Profession like free trade in reporting, they must take with it its consequences, and among them, the pressure on the reporter of the court, to omit no case which may by possibility be at some time relied on by somebody, as an authority for something.

We have thus pointed out the principal and most grave faults of the present system of reporting—faults which attach to it in its quality of a literary and commercial enterprise, and which will not be cured either by reducing the price per sheet, or bringing out the parts with greater rapidity. These changes will be beneficial, but some much more radical change is requisite before the authorised reports of the courts will be what they ought to be, and what they were in the olden times.

his matter to those dimensions than to issue it at double the length, and by an affidavit by the publisher that the expense of correcting the press, in order so to condense, had exceeded the expense of printing double the quantity—the purchasing public would believe neither the author nor the publisher; at any rate, they would not purchase the book.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—Your correspondent who signs his letter "J." seems very ill informed on the subject on which he writes. For his information I will tell him that, with one exception only, (and that I believe was the case of a late appointment), no county court judge thought it necessary to have his appointment stamped, and consequently it is an erroneous inference to suppose that those only were retained by the Audit-office which were unstamped. The fact is, that, after a long delay, the appointments were returned unstamped; and since their return, some of the county court judges, but by no means all of them, have paid for their stamps, trusting to the honour of Government to refund the money in case it shall be found that the demand is illegal; and I may add, that there are strong grounds for believing that the demand is illegal; for in addition to the grounds stated in my last letter, it is worthy of remark, that when the majority of the judges were appointed, they were not paid by salary, (as required by the Stamp Act), but by fees. They were only paid by salary some years after they had been in possession of their office. As to the appointment of judges in fresh districts, "J." is perfectly welcome to his construction of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, if he can make it good.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

YOUR CORRESPONDENT OF SEPT. 24.

I, ROBERT MONSEY, Baron CRANWORTH, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, intrusted, by virtue of her Majesty the Queen's sign-manual, with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, do, with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Sir JAMES LEWIS KNIGHT BRUCE and the Right Hon. Sir GEORGE JAMES TURNER, the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, also being intrusted as aforesaid, and by virtue and in exercise of the powers or authorities in this behalf vested in me by the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853, and of every other power or authority in anywise enabling me in this behalf, order as follows:—

1. The General Orders in Lunacy dated respectively the 27th day of October, 1842, and the 15th day of April, 1844, are hereby discharged.

2. All pending proceedings are to be carried on according to the provisions of these Orders, as far as may be practicable, and, subject thereto, according to the practice heretofore subsisting; and, in case of doubt as to the mode of procedure, in such of the modes aforesaid as the Masters shall direct; and the provisions of these Orders are to be deemed to be subject to variation by special order in any case, and are to be applicable only where there may be no express directions contained in or given by any special order concerning any of the several matters provided for in these Orders, or so far as such directions may not extend.

3. In these Orders, unless there be something in the subject-matter or context repugnant to such a construction, words expressed in the singular and in the plural number respectively are to be construed as applicable respectively to several persons or things, and to one person or thing; and words importing the masculine gender are to be construed as applicable to females as well as males. Where, in these Orders, or in a special order, a limited time from and after a date or event is appointed or allowed for doing any act or taking any proceeding, the computation of such limited time is not to include the day of such date or of the happening of such event as aforesaid, but is to commence at the beginning of the next following day; and the act or proceeding is to be done or taken, at the latest, on the last day of the limited time according to this computation.

5. Where, according to these Orders, or a special order, the time for doing any act or taking any proceeding expires on a Sunday, or on a day on which the offices are closed, and by reason thereof the act or proceeding cannot be done or taken on that day, the act or proceeding is, as far as regards the time of doing or taking the same, to be held to be duly done or taken if done or taken on the Monday next following, or on the day on which the offices next open, as the case may be.

Proceedings after Inquisition.

11. The Masters are in each matter, immediately after inquisition finding the party to be a lunatic, to inquire and report on the matters following:—

1. The lunatic's situation.
2. The nature of his lunacy.
3. Who is the most fit person to be appointed the committee of his person and of his estate.
4. Of what his fortune consists.
5. The amount of his income.
6. In what manner, and at what expense, and by whom, and where, he has been maintained; what is fit to be allowed for his past maintenance; whether anything and what is due, and to whom, in respect thereof; and to whom and out of what fund the same ought to be paid.
7. What is fit to be allowed for his future maintenance, from what time the allowance ought to commence, and out of what fund the same ought to be paid.

12. The Masters are to be at liberty from time to time to make such inquiries as to them shall seem expedient respecting any dealings with the lunatic's estate, and the application of the same, or any part thereof, prior to the date of the inquisition, and respecting the state and condition of the lunatic when any such dealings took place, whether any request or proposal in that behalf shall or shall not have been made to or laid before them, and to report thereon, and on the circumstances connected therewith, and the steps, if any, proper to be taken, and by and against whom in relation thereto.

13. The Masters are to be at liberty, when it shall seem to them expedient, to inquire what debts, if any, not open to dispute or question, are due from the lunatic, and to whom, and whether the same or any and what parts or part thereof ought to be paid, and out of what funds or property, and to entertain proposals for the adjustment and settlement thereof, and for the compromise and settlement of any disputed debt, claim, or demand upon or against the lunatic or his estate, and to report on such matters respectively.

14. The Masters are also to be at liberty from time to time to receive any proposal and conduct any inquiry touching any other matters affecting the property of the lunatic, whether real or personal, and to report thereon.

15. The committee of the estate is annually, or at such longer or shorter periods as the Masters shall fix, to procure his accounts to be delivered into the Masters' office, and is to attend before the Masters from time to time, and at or within such time as the Masters shall fix, and have such accounts taken and passed; in taking and passing which accounts the Masters are to make to him all just allowances, including an allowance of his reasonable and proper costs, charges, and expenses of passing the accounts, and those of the next of kin and other persons (if any) allowed to attend on the passing of the accounts, at the costs of the estate.

16. The balances certified by the Masters to be due from the committee of the estate on passing his accounts from time to time, or so much thereof respectively as the Masters certify to be proper to be paid by him, are to be paid by him, at or within such time as the Masters shall fix, into the Bank, with the privy of the Accountant-General, to the credit of the matter, and the same, when paid in, and any sum of cash at the Bank to which the lunatic may be entitled, or so much thereof respectively as the Masters shall by their certificate direct, are from time to time, and in case the Masters shall think fit to fix a time, then within such time as the Masters shall fix, to be laid out in the purchase of Bank 3l. per Cent. Annuities, in the name and with the privity of the said Accountant-General, in trust in the matter; and the dividends from time to time to accrue due on the Bank Annuities to be so purchased, and all accumulations of dividends, are, unless the Masters shall otherwise certify, as and when the same amount to a competent sum, to be laid out by the Accountant-General in like manner, without any request for the purpose.

17. Where the committee of the estate makes default in bringing in his account, or in having the same passed, or in paying the balance certified to be due from him, or in causing the same, or any sum of cash in the Bank, to be laid out pursuant to any certificate or direction in that behalf, the Masters are, unless good cause be shewn to them to the contrary, not only to disallow any salary claimed by him or his representatives, but also to charge him or them with interest, after the rate of 5l. per cent. per annum, upon any balance or cash for the time during which the same respectively appears to have improperly remained in hand or uninvested, (as the case may be).

18. The committee of the estate is, on each occasion of passing his account, and also whensoever the Masters may so require, to satisfy the Masters that his sureties are living, and that neither of them has been declared bankrupt or insolvent; and in default thereof, the Masters are to require him to enter into fresh security within such time as they shall fix.

19. The security of the committee of the estate may be from time to time, on request, reduced to an amount corresponding, in the judgment of the Masters, with the condition for that time being of the estate and effects of the lunatic, and the dividends, interest, and annual produce thereof; and he is to be at liberty to enter from time to time into fresh security accordingly, to the approbation of the Masters.

20. Where the Masters, by certificate, direct or give liberty for the payment into the Bank of money, or the transfer into the name of the Accountant-General of stock respectively belonging to the lunatic, to the credit of or in trust in the matter, they are to be at liberty to direct that the same be placed to such particular account, or that it shall not be paid or transferred out without notice to such person, as occasion may require and they may direct.

21. The Masters are from time to time, in each of the cases following, without special order, to inquire and report whether or not it is expedient that a committee of the person or of the estate should be appointed, and if so, who is the most fit person to be appointed; that is to say—

1. On default of a person approved to be committee of the estate in duly perfecting his security.
2. On default of a committee of the estate in duly perfecting a fresh security when required by the Masters.
3. On the death or discharge of a committee, or one of several committees, (where the custody does not survive.)

22. The Masters are to be at liberty to permit any person whose attendance may appear to them to be proper, and for the security or advantage of the lunatic or his estate, other than the committee and next of kin of the lunatic, to attend on the proceedings or on any particular proceeding before them in the matter, and all the provisions contained in sect. 81 of the said act, as to the attendance of next of kin, are to extend and apply, mutatis mutandis, to the attendance of such person as aforesaid, as well before the Masters as before the Lord Chancellor or Lords Justices.

23. The Masters are to be at liberty to direct that several parties appearing before them by different solicitors shall appear by the same solicitor, or otherwise at their own costs; or that several parties appearing before them by the same solicitor shall appear by different solicitors; and the parties are not to appear otherwise before the Lord Chancellor or Lords Justices, except by special leave, or at their own costs.

24. The Masters are to be at liberty, on request or otherwise, to make a separate report, or to state any circumstances specially with respect to the subject-matter of a report, as they see fit, and are to be at liberty to make a special report or special certificate on any matter, as they see fit.

25. In reports, certificates, orders, and other documents issued from or brought into the offices of the Masters and Registrar respectively, numbers are to be denoted by figures and not by words, except in affidavits and the conclusions of reports and certificates, and the ordering parts of orders.

26. Any person in whose custody, possession, power, or control the same may be, is to be at liberty to deposit any will, codicil, or testamentary paper of the lunatic in the office of the Masters, upon oath, as they may direct, there to remain for safe custody.

Stamps and Per-centage.

27. The stamps to be used under the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853, shall be the same as those for the time being in use under an act passed in the session of Parliament held in the fifteenth and sixteenth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for the Relief of the Suitors of the High Court of Chancery." Such stamps are to be affixed, by the parties requiring the same, on the vellum, parchment, or paper on which the proceeding in respect whereof such stamps shall be required is written or ingrossed, or which may otherwise be used in reference to such proceeding.

28. Every officer who shall receive any document to which a stamp shall be so affixed is immediately upon the receipt thereof to obliterate or deface such stamp, by impressing thereon a seal to be provided for that purpose, but so as not to prevent the amount of the stamp from being ascertained; and no such document is to be filed or delivered out until the stamp thereon shall be obliterated or defaced as aforesaid.

29. The Masters may, in such cases as they may think fit, certify that the whole or any part of the per-centage payable under the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853, is to be paid from time to time out of cash arising from dividends of the lunatic that may be standing to the credit of the matter of any lunacy, either generally or to any particular account; and in such cases the certificate is to be left at the office of the Accountant-General, and the Accountant-General is, by virtue of such certificate, when so left, from time to time out of such cash to carry over to the credit of the Suitors' Fee Fund Account the amount to be so certified; and any orders made and to be made in any such matters respectively are to be subject to this Order, and to be acted upon by the Accountant-General accordingly.

30. In all other cases the said per-centage is to be paid by means of stamps, and the chief clerk to the Masters is from time to time to give notice in writing to the committee or other person of the amount of per-centage to be paid by him, according to the certificate of the Masters, under sect. 27 of the said act, and of the time within which such amount is to be paid, which time is to be fixed by the Masters, and mentioned in their certificate; and the said committee or other person is within such time to pay the amount stated in the notice out of the income of the lunatic, by purchasing stamps to such amount, and file such notice, with the stamps affixed, at the office of the Masters.

31. Where it appears to the Masters, with a view to the establishment of a uniform period for the payment of per-centage in the several matters in lunacy, or for other purposes, to be expedient, they are to be at liberty to make in any case a certificate comprising the income of a period greater or less than one year, and stating the amount of per-centage payable for such period, calculated according to the scale provided in the said act.

32. The Masters are, once at least in every six months, and oftener if they shall think fit, to certify the names of all persons, if any, who shall then be in default in paying the amount certified to be payable by them in respect of the said per-centage, and filing the notices duly stamped as hereinbefore provided, with the amounts payable by such parties respectively.

33. The foregoing Orders respecting per-centage shall extend and be applied to the property of lunatics under the protection of the Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices, intrusted as aforesaid, by virtue of proceedings taken under the act of the session of Parliament holden in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 95; and also to the property of lunatics under the protection of the Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices, intrusted as aforesaid, by virtue of the transmission of the record of an inquisition from Ireland, and its entry of record in the Chancery of England, except in respect of income arising from property of such persons not within the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices, intrusted as aforesaid, nor administered under their authority; and the several foregoing Orders as to fees shall extend and apply to all the proceedings in the matter of such lunatics as aforesaid, and in the matter of any persons residing out of England and Wales, and declared idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind, according to the laws of the place where they are residing, where the Lord Chancellor or Lords Justices, intrusted as aforesaid, make an order affecting the stock, or any portion of the capital, stock, or shares of such person as last aforesaid, or the dividends thereof.

And for the purpose of saving the repetition in Orders in Lunacy that may from time to time be made, of directions usually inserted therein, I do, in pursuance of the Lunacy Regulation Act, 1853, and with the advice and assistance aforesaid, further order as follows:—

34. Where any matter or thing is referred to or is directed or permitted to be done by or before the Masters, it is to be considered to be referred to them jointly and severally, and may be done by or before them or either of them, but so nevertheless that all matters in the same lunacy may, so far as may be convenient, be conducted and carried on before the same Master.

35. All orders for the appointment of committees, and for the allowance of maintenance, are to be deemed to take effect only until further order.

36. Where it is ordered that a person named be appointed committee of the estate, the order is to be deemed to take effect only on the Masters certifying that he has given such security as they have approved of for answering the estate, and accounting for the rents, profits, and produce thereof once in every year, or oftener if thereunto required, before the Masters, and such security is to be perfected at or within such time as the Masters may appoint; and until such security shall have been perfected, the approved committee is not to interfere in any manner in the affairs and concerns of the lunatic, as the committee of his estate or otherwise.

37. Where it is ordered that a person named be appointed receiver of the estate, or the Masters are directed to appoint a receiver thereof, they are to allow him a reasonable salary for his care and pains in the management of the estates, he first giving security, to be allowed of by the Masters, and taken before a commissioner to administer oaths in Chancery in the country, if there shall be occasion, duly and annually to account for what he shall receive, and to pay the same as he shall be directed. And the tenants of the lunatic's estates are to attorn and pay their rents in arrear and growing rents to the receiver, who is to be at liberty to let and set the estates from time to time, with the approbation of the Masters, as there shall be occasion.

38. Where it is ordered that the committee of the estate do receive, or be at liberty to receive, any money on account of the lunatic or his estate, he is to give credit for the same on passing his accounts before the Masters; and where any sum is ordered to be allowed for the maintenance of the lunatic, or to be expended for any other purpose out of his estate, the committee of the estate is to be allowed the amount of the allowance for maintenance, or the amount to be expended, (as the case may be), on passing his accounts before the Masters.

39. Where it is ordered that the committee of the estate do pay any sums of money for maintenance, he is to pay the same out of income; and where it is ordered that he do pay any costs, he is to pay the same, when taxed, out of any monies coming to his hands, after providing for the maintenance.

40. Where it is ordered that the committee of the estate or the person be at liberty to retain any furniture or effects of the lunatic, he is to sign an inventory thereof, and an undertaking to deliver up the same when required so to do, and such inventory and undertaking are to be deposited in the office of the Masters.

41. Where it is ordered that the committee of the estate be discharged, the Masters are to take and pass his account of his receipts and payments for and on account of the lunatic and his estate from his appointment, or from the foot of his then last account passed in the matter, up to the day of the date of the order; and the balance (if any) which the Masters may certify to be due from the committee on passing the aforesaid account is to be paid by him, by virtue of the certificate, into the Bank, with the privity of the Accountant-General, to the credit of the matter, within such time as the Masters shall by their certificate direct; and in case the Masters shall find a balance to be due to the discharged committee, the same is to be paid to him by the new committee of the estate out of the estate of the lunatic; and upon payment of the aforesaid balance (if any) by the discharged committee in manner aforesaid, or in case there shall not be a balance found due from him, or in case the taking and passing of the account is not required, and may in the opinion of the Masters be properly dispensed with, then his security is to be discharged.

42. Where the committee of the estate dies, the Masters are to take and pass the account of his receipts and payments for and on account of the lunatic and his estate from his appointment, or from the foot of his then last account passed in the matter, up to the day of his death; and the balance (if any) which the Masters may certify to be due from the late committee on passing the aforesaid account may be paid by his legal personal representatives, by virtue of the certificate, into the Bank, with the privity of the Accountant-General, to the credit of the matter, within such time as the Masters shall by their certificate direct; and in case the Masters shall find a balance to be due to the late committee, the same is to be paid to his legal personal representatives by the new committee of the estate, out of the estate of the lunatic; and upon payment of the aforesaid balance (if any) by the legal personal representatives of the late committee in manner aforesaid, or in case there shall not be a balance found due from him, or in case the taking and passing of the account is not required, and may in the opinion of the Masters be properly dispensed with, then his security is to be discharged.

43. LONDON, NOVEMBER 19, 1853.

We laugh at the verdict of the Welsh jury, who, trying a man for killing his wife upon great provocation, persisted, notwithstanding judicial remonstrance, in returning a verdict of "guilty, but served her right;" and we sometimes ridicule the practice of the French juries of returning verdicts of "guilty, with attenuating circumstances." But both these proceedings, the one in a rough and the other in a more polished manner, are in the right direction; they are steps in advance of the imperfect judicial civilisation of the middle ages.

It is not to be concealed that much of our present jurisprudence is behind the general civilisation of the age; it is the jurisprudence of the middle ages—much refined and purified no doubt, but still the jurisprudence of a period when the despotism by which society in a state scarcely beyond savagery is governed, was succeeded by the rigid and unbending laws and rules by which men govern themselves, when, having grasped at freedom, perhaps somewhat prematurely, and scarcely daring to trust to their tenure of it, they will not intrust power to any fellow-citizen on any other terms than those of subjection to rules which none, either governors or governed, are to break through or call in question.

It is a part of this system which still at this day entails upon the tribunals of this country the duty of generally—indeed, nearly always—in deciding between a plaintiff and defendant, whether in civil or in criminal cases, determining absolutely that the one is right and the other wrong, in the face of general experience and of particular evidence, both of which almost always shew that neither party is entirely right or entirely wrong. Perhaps the civilisation of that portion of mankind of which common juries are composed, is not yet sufficiently advanced to make it safe to trust them with the power of returning verdicts of "guilty, but served her right," or even "guilty, with attenuating circumstances." But if such a discretion cannot be intrusted to such tribunals, it might, at any rate, not unsafely be intrusted to judges in cases which rest upon their unfettered decision.

We have been led into these remarks by considering a class of cases which come frequently before equity judges, and of which a striking instance is now under consideration, and standing for judgment before one of the learned Vice-Chancellors. We allude to those cases in which one person having so dealt with two or more others, that he has cheated one or other of them, the contest is, which of the cheatees has the best equity. The one in whose favour the decision is, must, by the course of practice, have the whole advantage; the other the whole loss. Ex gr., the case now standing for judgment is of this kind. A. agrees to sell real estate to B. The conveyance is prepared and executed, with a receipt indorsed, and the legal estate is duly transferred to B. For some reason, good or bad, but not fraudulent, in the ordinary sense, on the part of A., he allows B. a few days to pay the money, and allows him in the meantime to take away the conveyance and other deeds. B. goes, and, in a few days before he has paid the money, deposits his deeds, by way of equitable mortgage, with C., and then departs this realm without paying A.: which is to be the loser, A. or C.? B. has cheated one or the other, or both; that is clear. But the only question that equity can decide is, whether A. has a prior lien for his purchase money, or C. a prior lien for his mortgage money. It is argued on the one side that A., by letting the deeds go out of his possession, has, besides being a great fool, permitted or put it in the power of B. to commit a fraud on C.; and therefore A., and not C., ought to suffer. It is argued on the other side that C., by taking an equitable mortgage when he might have taken a legal one, has himself been the negligent party; and that when he thus takes a mere equity, he takes it with knowledge that there may be prior equities, and takes subject to them; and that he, and not A., ought to suffer. Now, no man untainted by equity can consider the case without seeing, not that A. and C. have been exactly equal in negligence, but that it would puzzle any mortal to say which had been the most foolish and negligent; and therefore that they ought, in common justice and honesty, to divide the mischief between them; and to this conclusion no doubt any man would equally come if he might, though overlaid with equity; but to such a conclusion no equity judge can come. He must decide that A. is right, or that C. is right. He must give A. or C. the prior lien—that is, he is forced by the law of the court to make a decree manifestly unjust and nonsensical. It matters not for which party he decides. In such a case as the one we are alluding to, the difference of right or of wrong between the two litigants is so infinitely small, so inappreciable—the reasoning by which either can be said to be less wrong than the other is so subtle, that any decree in favour of either must be nonsense, and, what is worse, injustice. It is not the fault of the judge; it is the fault of the law, which does not, in this age, intrust to a judge sufficient power to arbitrate between two litigants, and to apportion, as it were, his judgment to their respective proportions of merit. In such a case—and though we have selected one as an example, it is but a type—Haroun Alraschid, or the Black Douglas, might have done justice; he might also have done injustice. But an English equity judge, in the year 1853, must do injustice, let him decide as he will.

Take, again, such a case as that of the architect so recently before the public. His alleged offence was, according to law, manslaughter. Of that he was guilty or not guilty. The coroner's jury felt the absurdity of finding him guilty of manslaughter, and also felt the injustice of finding him guilty of nothing; and they tried to escape by something like a French verdict. The coroner, very properly, as a judicial officer, insisted on a verdict according to law, guilty or not guilty; and the jury, thus pressed, and thinking the accused a shade more guilty than not guilty, found him guilty. The grand jury thought the reverse, that he was a little nearer not guilty than guilty, and so threw out the bill. Both tribunals being driven to an absurd decision by the state of the law, which intrusts nothing to the deciding tribunal but to say yea or nay.

In the case to which we refer, the absurdity of both decisions was flagrant. No man of sense could read the evidence and fail to see that to call the unhappy architect a manslaughterer, and to punish him as such, would be the grossest injustice; nor could any man fail to see that to some, and perhaps to grave censure, he was obnoxious, and that from him some retribution was due; but the positive character of our law required him to be treated as guilty of a great crime, which he obviously was not, or to be entitled to an almost oval escape, which was just as little his due.

It is time that these barbarisms should be removed from our laws. They are founded, as we have observed, on that fixedness of rule which our ancestors established, and to which their descendants have clung; and which was wise and useful in a state of society in which men, having but recently and uncertainly shaken off despotism, could not find safety for freedom except in circumscribing all authority by regulations which should leave little or nothing to individual judgment and individual power. But we are now entering on a state of civilisation in which freedom is established on a sufficiently firm basis, to make it safe to give something more approaching dictatorial authority, to those to whom the administration of justice is intrusted. Sure are we that for one injustice which would be committed by a judge, if he had larger discretion, and could apportion his decisions, a dozen are committed by the fixed and rigid law, of which he is now but the mouth-piece and exponent.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

A REPORT by Mr. Bellenden Ker to the Lord Chancellor, and some papers by the junior commissioners, have been printed and presented to the House of Lords, but, for some unapparent reason, they are not yet to be had either at the Queen's printer's or at Hansard's*. This is to be regretted, because the subject has been very well opened up by the junior commissioners, who, among them, have furnished sufficient materials for considering and deciding upon the best mode of dealing with it.

Mr. Ker appears to have hitherto acted rather as foreign secretary to the four gentlemen who are placed under him than as chief commissioner, and his report consists merely of a statement of what has been done by the junior commissioners, with a few general remarks on what remains to be done.

Mr. Ker points out two possible courses: first, to ascertain and declare by enactment what statutes are in force, and thus provide a text for future consolidation; or, secondly, at once to arrange and consolidate the existing law; and he suggests, that, in performing the latter task, it would be safer to attempt no alteration in the language of those acts which have been worked out into a body of law by decisions, (e.g. the Statute of Uses), while others (such as those relating to the revenue) might be better dealt with at once by consolidation. Thus the bulk of the statute law might be very much reduced by consolidating particular groups of statutes before proceeding to a general revision. The revision should then be made, not indiscriminately, but in groups of statutes, arranged according to their subjects. After suggesting the establishment of a general board for revising bills in their initiatory stages, Mr. Ker refers to an estimate, prepared by the secretary to the commission, of the space which has been saved in the printed acts of Parliament since the passing of the various Clauses Consolidation Acts. The estimate is, that more than 100,000 pages have been saved in 3000 private acts.

Mr. Brickdale in one of his papers points out, and illustrates from the recent statutes of New York, the benefit to be effected from a digest of the statute law, in promoting uniformity and conciseness of expression in subsequent legislation—in securing the law from alterations made without a due consideration of the entire subject—in preventing the necessity of recitals of existing laws, and repetitions of similar provisions—in facilitating the establishment of a permanent board for the purpose of securing to some extent uniformity in the legislative style, and also of periodically issuing a revised and authentic text of the statute law. This paper contains some good remarks on the defects of the existing Clauses Consolidation Acts, and on the abuse of interpretation clauses; and a severe criticism on the absurd act “for shortening the language used in acts of Parliament.”

In another paper Mr. Brickdale states some doubts and difficulties which occurred to him in preparing specimens of a digest of the law of distress:—“The specimens are framed in three different ways: first, taking the mere statute law of the subject alone; secondly, taking the whole law, both statute and common, and without introducing any simplification or other alteration; thirdly, taking the whole law, and introducing such alterations as would be generally admitted to be reasonable and desirable, without altering the general character of the law.” Mr. Brickdale points out that the revision of the statute law consists of ascertaining what enactments are, first, distinctly and in terms repealed or expired; secondly, obsolete; thirdly, doubtful whether revived by the repeal of a repealing statute, &c.; fourthly, abrogated by subsequent inconsistent enactments.

Proceeding to the subject of digesting and consolidating, Mr. Brickdale observes, that “a digest of the statute law only cannot be made practically useful or satisfactory. The statute law is not a branch of the law which can be treated separately, but a component part of it; and (except, of course, as to those subjects which owe their existence entirely to modern legislation) the statute law is, in fact, only a collection of fragmentary exceptions and alterations, unintelligible, except with reference to the whole law, which is to be found elsewhere. A digest of the statute law only will not, therefore, be a manual of the law, or in fact present any of the advantages which are generally expected from a digest; it will neither be complete nor simple. To what extent it will be imperfect and practically useless may be inferred from the first part of the specimens which I have prepared, on the principle of taking the statute law alone.” This is followed by the remark, that the simplification and amendment of the law must almost necessarily be combined with its consolidation.

The second specimen of a digest is referred to as shewing how strange and unsatisfactory a digest of the entire existing law on any subject must necessarily be; “some of the rules plainly obsolete or unreasonable, others almost unintelligible, others containing trivial exceptions or subject to trivial conditions;” and from this is deduced the moral, that as the preparation of a digest of so unsatisfactory a nature (which must necessarily be merely an introduction to an improved and simplified code) would be extremely irksome and discouraging, the proper course would be, in the first instance, to prepare a digest of the law with such simplifications and improvements as may be found necessary to make its provisions sensible and consistent; no attempt being made to alter the law in important particulars, or to interfere with the policy of particular provisions, in cases where that policy is not plainly obsolete, and alterations whenever made being specially pointed out. Of the mode of performing such a task a specimen is given, and the experience of the New York commissioners is referred to in confirmation of Mr. Brickdale's views.

Mr. Brickdale's papers are well worthy of attention, but we entirely dissent from his proposal to attempt a consolidation of the entire statute and common law. He could only have made it in forgetfulness of the essential difference between the common law and the statute. The operation is impossible. A code of common law is a contradiction in terms. The function of a statute is to correct and supply the deficiencies of the common law, but not to replace it; and every statute becomes in the course of time the nucleus of a group of common-law precedents, by which it is construed and applied. The various clauses of the existing written or statute law may be rewritten, with verbal corrections, and in any order of collocation that is thought convenient, and the written law will remain unchanged; but the common law would lose in codification every characteristic which gives it its peculiar value. No doubt, a code of statute law could be compiled from the common law, and substituted for it. That would be legislation, not consolidation, and the immediate result would be a prodigious increase of uncertainty and litigation, which would be endless, if, as consistency would require, the sacrifice of past judicial precedents were accompanied with a veto on the use of those to come. Every case would then be a case of first impression; there would be no general or professional interest in uniformity of decision. Every judge would do what seemed right in his own eyes, and his highest measure of right or law would be his own intellect, unaided by the accumulated wisdom of ages. The present state of the administration of the law in the police and county courts affords a faint indication of what may be expected from a judicature whose decisions are not precedents. No doubt some heads of law now resting partly on precedent might be included with tolerable completeness in a “consolidation act;” and the subject of distresses was not ill chosen by Mr. Brickdale for the purpose. It is not among such heads of mere arbitrary regulation that the excellences of the common law are to be sought. Let the attempt be made to codify the law of contracts. The statute law is a collection of positive precepts expressed in precise language, or at least in terms which are to be construed as if they were precise and full exponents of the sovereign will. If the provisions are incomplete, or inaccurately expressed, the judge has no power to expand or correct them. Such a law can never rise above the level of the capacity and powers of the individuals who frame it, and, even in proportion to the scientific skill bestowed upon its preparation, would be liable to be misunderstood and misapplied, if administered without the light of judicial precedents. What would a second-rate judge make of the modern statutes of prescription and limitation without the aid of Bright v. Walker, James v. Salter, Grant v. Ellis, &c., or of the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, without Whimore v. Robertson? The common law is a collection of precedents, from which the law is to be collected by inference. The precision which is essential in a statute is needless in the record of a precedent. The material facts of the case, the decision, and an indication of the grounds of the decision, stated with only so much accuracy as an ordinary reporter can command, are the sole elements of a complete precedent. From such a report we learn infallibly, and with scarcely any dependence on the accuracy of its language, the precise principle on which the decision proceeded—the principle for which it is an authority. A cluster of such precedents, associated by a community of subject, presents to us a rule, with its limits, qualifications, applications, and exceptions, ascertained after laborious and repeated discussions, during successive generations, by the finest legal intellects of the country, and expressed by a method which presents to us the mental processes by which the results were obtained, and not the mere results abstracted in fixed formula; and when a precedent directly in point cannot be found, light may be drawn from others by means of inference and analogy. The maxim, "expressio unius," &c., so important in the interpretation of the statute law, has no application in the use of precedents. We shall extract below some excellent remarks on this subject by Mr. Coode.

Mr. Rogers, in a separate paper, also recommends a digest of the whole law, and expresses his belief that "the common law, properly so called, forms but an infinitesimally small fraction of the corpus of the law at the present day;" and he proceeds to justify his belief in terms which shew that he does not yet understand the nature of the common law. Our conviction is, that the contributions of the common law, even to a code, would greatly exceed in bulk those of the existing statutes. Be this as it may, we trust that no other digest of the common law will ever be attempted than a digest of the reported decisions and other authorities. We cannot generalise our common law, because its essence is, that it teaches by example; but we may put those examples in a more convenient form. We may revise our reports and digest them, as we propose to digest our statutes; we may expunge precedents which have been overruled or have become obsolete; and we may express in concise language all that is material, of circumstance, decision, or dictum, in those which remain. Having done that, we may give to our digest the same authority which the reports now possess, and forbid the citation of the reports prior to the digest; and we may provide for the annual revision of the digest. Such a work would reduce the existing thousand volumes of precedents to twenty, and would tend more than any other measure to facilitate and improve the practice and administration of the law.

In a joint paper by Messrs. Anstey and Rogers it is announced that those gentlemen have completed an expurgatory list of such public general acts as appear to be repealed, virtually repealed, obsolete, expired, and virtually expired. The list contains 10,047 acts, or about two-thirds of the entire number of the public general acts, and it has been referred to Mr. Brickdale for revision. The paper contains a statistical account of the statute-book, and an analysis of the subjects of the existing public general acts. A specimen of the expurgatory index accompanies the paper. A separate paper by Mr. Anstey contains some good criticism on past legislative errors, and recommends the immediate passing of an act declaring the repeal of the statutes comprised in the expurgatory list.

It is in Mr. Coode's papers that the key to the problem propounded to the commissioners is to be sought. His tract "On Legislative Expression, or the Language of the Written Law," (first printed as an introduction to the Appendix annexed to the Report of the Poor-law Commissioners on Local Taxation presented to Parliament in 1843), has established his reputation as a sound and philosophical thinker on the subject. Mr. Coode is the only one of the commissioners who has ever attempted to go to the foundations of the subject, and to establish a comprehensive system of legislative expression which shall be available now and for all time; and as his papers are still inaccessible, we shall expect the thanks of our readers for the following rather copious extracts. We give the introductory observations entire:—

"Introductory Observations.

"I have the honour to submit, as my contribution to the labours of the commission for consolidating the statute law, the following papers:—

- "I. On the collection of the materials for legislation or consolidation, their collation and connexion; with an appendix, being a specimen of a chronological register of the statutes in force, their duration and interoperation.
- "II. On the digestion of the materials for legislation and consolidation;
on their analysis;
on their recomposition;
on their expression;
with two appendices;
the first, being suggestions as to the preparation of compilations of the existing law, to precede or accompany bills in Parliament;
the second, exemplifying the operation of digesting, being a digest of the acts for the relief of the poor.
- "III. On consolidation.
- "IV. On subsequent legislation, with a view to preserve the order and consistency of the law after consolidation.

"(1). Lest it should appear that the subject thus treated in connexion with current and future legislation extends beyond the due limits of our commission, it may be proper, once for all, to justify the breadth with which it is here discussed.

"It would be easy mechanically to exclude from the discussion all reference to future legislation, for the erasure of a few words in the following papers would effectually suppress all verbal reference to it; but still the whole subject would, nevertheless, be involved as effectually, in spite of this seeming exclusion, as it would be in the most emphatic expression. For the function of legislation is essentially the same to-day as it was 1000 years ago, and as it will be 1000 years hence. The instrument by which it operates—language—may change in its fashion, and even in its terms; but the principles upon which it was to be used at one time, to insure clearness, consistency, comprehensiveness, or compactness, were the same as must be applied now, and as long as language exists, for the attainment of the same ends. And even as to the elements which the maker of a law, has to operate on or to operate with, they always have, when known at all, synonymous names, and the same definition and the same value and place in a general order or in a methodical enumeration or collection. Whatever defect of method or enunciation has made any old law obscure, confused, ineffectual, or inconvenient, would make a future law so too. Whatever is ascertained as an improvement on an old law, in form and expression, will be equally beneficial in application to a new one. Whatever method may be now found to be necessary and effectual to cure evils already accumulated would not only cure, but, when applied preventively, wholly eradicate, the like evils in the future. In short, the order and expression of the law of the past, the present, and the future times is essentially but one and the same thing, and there is no practical consideration pertinent to the one which is not equally so to the others.

"It is not, then, through any ambition unduly to extend the scope of these remarks beyond the scope of my commission that they include equally the subjects of the digestion of the past and that of prospective legislation, but because in any remarks of real practical pertinency it would be a mere affectation of self-restraint to pretend to abstain from any part of what is intrinsically and inevitably one indivisible whole. By the necessity involved in an unreserved expression of a single subject, not by a free choice, these papers apply equally to the consolidation of the existing statutes and the composition of future statutes.

"(2). On the other hand, inasmuch as the consolidation of the statute law necessarily involves a considerable operation upon the body of judicial decisions which have interpreted it, it may seem to be an objection that these papers make little or no express reference to this mass of interpretation. But this in the main consists of matter implicitly involved in the operations, whatever they may be, to which the statute law, the occasion of all this interpretation, may itself be subjected. All this interpretation is necessarily applied in each instance to law in eadem materia, and the questions disposed of generally are these:—Whether two provisions, or only one, apply to the matter in hand? If two or more provisions apply in terms to the same matter, but with different practical effect, which provision prevails? How far a subsequent statute prevails in this or that case over an earlier one? How far a general provision affects a more special one, and vice versa? How discordant and disparate expressions are to be reconciled and applied together? How far defective expressions are to be completed, or too extensive expressions restrained? and the like. It is manifest as to all such questions that they arise chiefly out of two circumstances, both of which must cease to exist in exact proportion as consolidation takes place. For, when the whole of the statutory law in the same matter is consolidated in the same statute, no question of anteriority, posteriority, of actual or virtual abrogation, limitation, extension, or other modification in which succession in time is an element, can possibly arise; and when the co-ordination of parts or the generality or speciality of each provision is shown by its place and order in one statute, that visible co-ordination renders unnecessary and inapplicable all rules and all processes invented and applied to discover it when concealed by the dislocation of the matter in scattered and undigested records; and thus the elaborate system of rules of construction, and the vast mass of decisions on this class of cases, will lose their application when all provisions upon the same subject are contemporaneously and methodically expressed in the same statute.

“As to that mass of decisions which have supplied defects and limited excesses in the terms of statutes bringing within their operation cases not expressed, and excluding from their operation cases verbally comprehended in their terms, it is plain that all the cases so included or excluded should be considered at the same time and with the same view as all other practical changes to be introduced upon practical grounds into the consolidated acts, on which occasion these decisions, so far as they are approved by experience, will serve as a predominating authority for a corresponding contraction, or extension, or modification of the terms of the statute law. These cases, then, should all be collected and included in the digest recommended in these papers. Such cases affecting the poor laws would have been so included in the Digest of Poor Laws appended to Paper II, but for the want of time to render it complete in this respect.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 26, 1853.

THE case of Lumley v. Gye, (2 Fl. & Bl. 216; 17 Jur., part 1, p. 827), which has been before the Courts of law and equity in various forms, was elaborately considered in the Court of Queen's Bench upon the point, whether an action could be maintained for procuring Miss Wagner to break her contract with the plaintiff to sing at his theatre. The result was a difference of opinion in the learned judges—Coleridge, J., holding that the action did not lie, while Wightman, Erle, and Crompton, JJ., delivered their judgments in favour of the plaintiff*. It appears to have been admitted by all that an action would lie for seducing a servant, with notice that he was the servant of another, and that it was immaterial whether the service had been actually entered upon or not, so long as the contract of service was in force; but Coleridge, J., was of opinion that this was an exceptional case, founded upon the Statute of Labourers, 25 Edw. 3, c. 1, and not to be extended beyond the class of servants therein enumerated, or such as are ejusdem generis. The Statute of Labourers, reciting, that in consequence of so many persons having died of the plague, excessive wages were required, and there was lack of ploughmen and such labourers, enacted that every person within the age of sixty years, not living in merchandise, nor exercising any craft, nor having of his own whereof he might live, nor proper land which he might till himself, should serve whoever might require him, at such wages as were given in 20 Edw. 3. In those days there was a summary way of disposing of strikes and other demands for a rise in wages on the part of workmen. This statute no doubt applied solely to workmen of low degree; but the majority of the judges in the Court of Queen's Bench held that the remedy for maliciously procuring a departure from a contract of service need not be so confined, but was applicable to all classes of the employed; and Wightman, J., expressed an opinion that the action was not originally founded on this statute, but that it lay at common law, though in a different form.

Two of the learned judges (Erle and Crompton, JJ.) intimated a very strong opinion that an action would lie for maliciously, or with notice, procuring the breach of any contract, and supported this view upon principle, by analogy, and such decisions as have proceeded from the Courts upon the subject.

The principle involved is found in Com. Dig., "Action upon the Case," A.:—"In all cases where a man has temporal loss or damage by the wrong of another, he may have an action on the case." The injuria and the damnum must concur, and the latter should be the natural or legal consequence of the former. Moreover, if the action be confined to the contracting parties alone, the measure of damages would often be inadequate for the wrong; while in an action against the one who maliciously procured the breach, full damage for the injury might be recovered.

* Lord Campbell, C. J., was absent.
VOL. XVII. T T

The analogy is furnished by the well-established action for maliciously inducing a servant to leave his master.

The authorities upon the question are few in number, and not decisive either way. In the case of Winsmore v. Greenbank (Willes, 577) the defendant was held liable to an action for procuring a violation of the plaintiff's right under the marriage contract, e. g. by inducing his wife to continue absent from him, whereby he lost the comfort of her society, and the profit of an estate which had been devised to her. In Sheperd v. Wakeman (1 Sid. 79) it was held an actionable wrong to procure a breach of contract of marriage, by asserting that the woman (who was the plaintiff) was already married. In Green v. Button (2 C., M., & R. 707) it was decided, that procuring a breach of a contract of sale of goods by a false claim of lien was actionable. It is to be observed that the two latter cases include a false representation.

The decisions relied upon in support of the contrary view are Ashley v. Harrison (1 Esp. 48) and Taylor v. Neri, (2 Esp. 386), in which it was held that a manager of a theatre could not sue for a libel or assault on a performer, whereby she was prevented from appearing on the stage. These cases Erle, J., thought rightly decided, on the ground that it was not shewn that the intent of the defendant was to procure a breach of contract; and Wightman and Crompton, JJ., said that the damage in them was too remote. In Vicars v. Wilcocks (8 East, 1) an action for slander was held not maintainable when the damage alleged was the dismissal of the plaintiff by a third party before the contract of service was at an end; but this proceeded on the ground that the damage was not the natural consequence of the original slander, but of unauthorised communications made by those to whom the words had been uttered by the defendant. In Morris v. Langdale, (2 B. & P. 289), Lord Eldon doubted whether the plaintiff could sue for slander when the damage was, that persons refused to perform contracts with him (the plaintiff) in consequence. The foundation of the doubt seems to have been, that compensation might be obtained from those who had wrongfully broken their contracts; but it is clear that full compensation might not thus be obtained.

We have now laid before our readers the synopsis of a case which occupies fifty-three pages in Ellis & Blackburn's Reports, and we must leave them to form their own opinion upon the question involved in it, which is one undoubtedly of considerable importance.

The Right Hon. Sir John Jervis, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women:—John Hostage, of Chester, in and for the city of Chester, also in and for the county of Chester; and John Oddin Taylor, of Norwich, in and for the city of Norwich, also in and for the county of Norfolk.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

WE continue our extracts from Mr. Coode's papers*:

"(3). But as to that more important independent substantive body of the common law, and the mass of authorities and decisions in which it is exhibited, very different considerations prevail. It is no part of the purpose of these papers to consider at all how this is to be affected. It is only conscious, intentional, avowed legislation, and not consolidation, which should be permitted to touch the substance either of the common law or of the statute law. Consolidation is not the substitution of one right, of one obligation, of one remedy, of one procedure, of one ministration, for another. This is legislation—an operation requiring for its due performance all the information, all the deliberation, all the public concurrence, all the disposal of the public force, that our legislative institutions can command and apply. Consolidation is a very different operation; it has its definite subject-matter provided for it beforehand, in terms selected, deliberated upon, and settled by the community and its appropriate agencies, and perhaps approved in practice by ages of experience. This matter is, perhaps, dispersed in very various quantities, at lesser or greater intervals; its expression may have all the defects incidental to language, aggravated by all the changes that language has undergone in course of time and change of fashion; it may be unsystematic, incongruous, inconsistent, even contradictory, and its order perverted in any degree. The task of the consolidator is to collect these dispersed expressions, to put them in an order according to their analogies, and thus to place each expression in immediate juxtaposition to that which has the closest relation to it, and thus, again, by an immediate comparison, to shew their relation, their analogy, their identity, or their incongruity; by this to suggest and display to the practical legislator the defect in one expression, the excess in another,—the accidental exclusions of appropriate subjects from one rule, the equally accidental inclusion of incongruous subjects under another, brought into one view at the same instant,—the useless multiplication of alternative provisions for the one case, the absolute deficiency of the requisite and analogous provisions for another. This is the task of the consolidator; feasible, indeed, by any single man fairly instructed and trained to the work, quite independently of public authority or power, but arduous and difficult enough in itself without any trespass on the domain of practical legislation; and when well performed, this work, thus limited, will have supplied to the legislator himself a vast field, a vast material, many useful suggestions, and great practical facilities for the exercise also of his appropriate function.

"(4). The task of consolidation is simple in regard to the statute law, for so much of this as is of general importance is all contained within the limits of some forty quarto volumes, and what is really in force constitutes but a very small part even of these. It is all already expressed in some terms, printed, and accessible in the very same letters to every man. However wide the differences in the interpretation that one man or another may put upon them, these terms themselves are still there in print, unchanged, and always producible to test the justness of every applied interpretation, judicial or non-judicial.

"It is widely wholly different with the common law, which consists in the principles exemplified in and deducible from the free usage of the community, and includes all that practice can possibly develop, or scientific reason consistently apply to all cases arising in the whole course of time. Its operation is exemplified in innumerable text-books and reports of decisions; but its terms and limits are nowhere laid down authoritatively, except only so far as it is excluded by statute. To fix the common law definitively in the language of this day is to paralyse judicial interpretation—to arrest the expansion and application of its doctrines to the course of events and the developing circumstances of successive times. The Legislature itself in England has never attempted it. Declaratory acts, which appear sometimes to declare the effect of the common law, never, in fact, do more than include a doubtful, perhaps a new, case within its operation. Authors, counsel, judges, sometimes attempt to define its limits, and some of them have, in some instances, done it with more or less success; but the greatest success in this way compels acquiescence in the definition only just so long as the definition is found to be consistent with the facts and circumstances to which it comes to be applied. It is attacked, modified, overthrown, so soon as occasion demonstrates its further inapplicability.

"To consolidate the common law, then, is to change its present expansible character entirely—to render from the moment of that operation its interpretation and application a miserable construction of mere forms of words, instead of a development, by induction, deduction, and analogy, of all necessary consequences and all consistent inferences from principles manifest in known practice and decided cases, but as yet unrestricted by any fixed form of words. This would be, in fact, not consolidation, but a most extensive and unprecedented exercise of legislative power—one as yet never arrogated by the Legislature itself.

"What the Legislature has done, and can always do beneficially, is merely to take, from time to time, out of the domain of the common law so much as appears practically to require the application of another rule than that of the common law. This is usually done with all possible safeguards against hasty and excessive encroachment on its principles. But being so done, the statutory rule which supersedes the common law, being limited by the terms in which it is expressed, is susceptible of reconstruction, translation, division, analysis, and recombination, as all other intelligible forms of words are, without danger, if proper care be used, either of extending or contracting its sense or operation. And this, which is constantly done with manifest advantage, is understood in these papers to be the sole object at present of the process of consolidation; and accordingly the whole tenor of the observations in these papers is confined to the consideration, how this statutory matter may be best reproduced in a new statutory form without change of its effect or extent, and without encroachment on the common law.

"(5). Again: these papers stop short of the attempt to reduce the law into a systematic code, or even to advocate such an attempt. In truth, the writer does not consider the object to be at present either feasible or desirable.

"No doubt a nation, having one homogeneous common law, developed by its own free usages in 1400 years, administered universally and consistently by one undivided judicature, amended and expanded in all such a period by one undivided Legislature, might, in some caprice or under some hallucination, resolve to have all the flexible and expansive principles of its common law fixed and cramped in the words and forms of a statute or code. But no such folly has ever yet, in fact, possessed even a village, still less an empire thus happily circumstanced. The Roman edicts and codes before Justinian, and his digest, and codes, and novels, were nothing of this kind. There was no common law in the multitudinous provinces of the Roman empire, and the Digest itself is but an undigested, though meritorious, collection of cuttings and scraps taken verbatim et literatim from the works of jurisprudential writers of more or less repute and authority; and the Code is an appendix of occasional and arbitrary edicts of successive emperors, arranged with some method, but in no respect resembling a code such as is recommended in recent times. The French Code was a resource of necessity, imposed, not chosen, upon the breaking up of innumerable provincial and local customs, upon the sudden introduction of a common national legislature and common tribunals, and where there was no semblance of a pre-existing common law. It was such a case as the sudden extension of one authority throughout the Heptarchy might have been, if multiplied in its operation about sixfold, and is as little applicable to the present circumstances of England and its common law, the slow, deliberate, free, popular, and homogeneous product of 1400 years of usage, legislative effort, political contest, and revolution of an undivided nation, and a concentrated legislature and administration. It would be out of place here to pursue this topic; but it seems safe to assume, that, without clear and express commission to do so, it would be a rash usurpation of a most perilous function to attempt to reduce all the expansible and infinitely developable principles of the common law of England into the terms and forms expressive of the conceptions of a compiler of the year 1853.

"(6). It is assumed, then, in these papers, that the statute law, already reduced to terms, and producible, is to be cleared of manifest superfluities, reduced to order by a methodical arrangement without change of parts, and that a consistent construction as to language is to be adopted also, so far as this involves no change in effect; but that all such changes in effect, whether in the statute law itself, and still more in the common law, however palpably justified by the process of consolidation, are still to be left to the ordinary course of practical legislation. In fine, these papers contemplate, not the policy or the practical motives of legislation, but only the form and the expression in which the statute law may be most conveniently and best exhibited, either in one operation, as in a consolidated act, or in successive operations, in the amendments which circumstances and experience from time to time require. They recommend no change in substance whatsoever, but, on the contrary, aim at the reproduction only of the identical effect of the existing law, and the literal and implicit and ministerial fulfilment of whatsoever may be the future and varying purposes of the Legislature.

"(7). Having so limited a purpose as these papers, it is somewhat beside the question here to inquire whether codification, in the sense in which most of its advocates recommend it, be, in truth, even a possible operation. It seems to many to be a very desirable thing that the whole body of the law of a country should be reduced within the compass of a portable volume—if possible, to a few compendious rules of the utmost generality and simplicity of expression; and it is to a systematising mind an easy and pleasant exercise to frame such abstractions as are thus contemplated. Indeed, the less the experience, and the less the materials, and the fewer the occasions for practical legislation or jurisprudence, the more simple, the more general is the law and the jurisprudence of every community; and when population is increased, and interests are complicated and occasions multiplied, the great and often the intolerable evil of the law has been, that rules of extreme simplicity have been still applied with a too simple and rigid logic, and extended by too subtle and speculative refinement to multitudes of cases practically requiring special, peculiar, and appropriate and varied provisions.

"On the other hand, the characteristic of our modern English legislation is, that it is sensible to all the influences of public and private interest; that it rapidly and incessantly varies the law for every variety of interest—for every change of circumstance; that, however often it may fail in its intention to fit a class of cases, its efforts to modify and adjust the law to the exigencies of every interest are persevering and unremitting. It is the resulting confidence that every proved grievance will, if possible, have its remedy—that every circumstance which renders the letter of the law oppressive will be admitted as a reason for special modification of the law—that justly begets a sense in every man that the law in England is not a tyranny—is not an oppression, but is his personal individual protection and defence.

"Bulk is no doubt an evil; multifariousness is no doubt inconsistent with simplicity; but bulk and multifariousness are inseparable from opulence and varied and multiform utility. In legislation, in jurisprudence, as in all other practical arts, we cannot have at the same time the simplicity of abstract science and the variety of appliance required by an advanced and varied condition of life. Simplification of expression is the proper aim of the philosopher and the professor; but special utility, neatness, accuracy, fitness of adjustment to every individual's circumstances and wants, are the proper aim of every practitioner in every art. To abandon variety and completeness of practical detail, in order to reduce the mass of the law or attain a formal simplicity of expression, would be, at present, both a premature and a retrograde step. The extensive practical changes recently made, and still making and impending, are enough to prove how premature it would be to formularise, however skilfully, the rules or principles of the existing law, which is still in a course of rapid evolution and of varied improvement in detail, in which the consideration of formal congruity is subordinate to the more immediate object of realising the greatest amount the circumstances of the day allow of plain working practical amendment.

LONDON, DECEMBER 3, 1853.

A VERY important point as to the jurisdiction of the Crown and of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in reference to the granting of extended patents, has been recently decided by that learned body. (In re Schlumberger's Patent, heard on the 28th and 29th November, 1853).

The question arose in this way. A patentee regularly applied for, and obtained, nearly three years ago, an Order in Council, under Lord Brougham's Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, for the extension of his patent. He then, for reasons which are for the purpose of this question immaterial, delayed prosecuting that order—that is, making the proper application for the sealing of the letters-patent—for a very long time. In the meantime a person, interested in opposing the grant, presented his petition to the Crown, asking to discharge the Order in Council, and that no warrant to seal might issue, and that no grant might be made; in effect, the petition was to ask the Crown to refuse the patent. The matter was referred, by an Order in Council in the usual form, to the Judicial Committee to consider, &c.

When the case came on to be heard, the patentee's counsel objected to the jurisdiction. The grounds of objection were, that the Crown had no power, before the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, to interfere at all in regard to the extension of patents; that its power is solely derived from the 4th section of that statute, which gives power to the Crown to refer to the Judicial Committee any petition to extend letters-patent, and power to grant such letters-patent; that the jurisdiction under that section had been exercised and exhausted, and there was no jurisdiction to refer to the Judicial Committee the question of rescinding an order for a grant, or of refusing a grant already directed to be made; that, in effect, that would be repealing a patent. At any rate, it was urged there was no such jurisdiction in a case where, as in the case before the Court, it was not alleged that the order was not right at the time it was made, and its operation was sought to be annulled by reason of subsequent matter.

On the other side it was said, that until the Great Seal was actually affixed, there was no grant; that the Queen's Order in Council was merely a direction to prepare letters-patent; and that at any time between that order and the actual sealing and issue of the letters-patent, it was within the power of the Crown to withhold the grant. That as to the power of the Crown to refer such a matter to the Judicial Committee, the Crown had power under the Privy Council Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, to refer to the Judicial Committee any matter whatsoever that her Majesty should think fit.

To this it was replied, that the power given to the Queen by that act, by the 4th section, must be taken with reference to the 3rd section, and that it means only such matters as could have before the act been referred by the Queen to her Privy Council. That at any rate it could not be intended to apply to referring any matter regarding the extension of letters-patent, because the Crown having, except under Lord Brougham's Act, no power to grant such letters-patent at all, it would be nugatory that the Crown should refer to the Judicial Committee the consideration of a matter in which, when the Judicial Committee should have advised, the Crown would have no power to act.

The Lords of the Judicial Committee were, however, of opinion that the 4th section of the Privy Council Act must be read in the largest sense, as giving power to the Crown to refer any matter for the consideration of the Judicial Committee, and that the Crown had power to interfere, and refuse, at any time before the patent had passed the Great Seal, to allow it to proceed. The result of this decision must not, of course, be taken to be, that, in every case of an application for an extension of a patent, a party who might have regularly opposed it, and did not, will be heard to come afterwards by a counter-petition to prevent the order being carried into effect by the Great Seal. It goes, however, to shew this—that in a case in which, for any sufficient reason, the course of opposing an application for extension of a patent has not been taken, and the Order in Council for the grant has gone, the course for stopping the making of the letters-patent is not to oppose, except by way of intermediate stay of proceeding, at the Great Seal, but to petition the Queen in Council to withhold her warrant for sealing, and to refuse to make any grant. It must be observed, however, that inasmuch as, if nothing is done to stop the sealing pending an application to the Judicial Committee, the patent would be sealed as of course, and then the jurisdiction of the Crown would be clearly gone, it is proper in such a case (as was done in the case referred to) to lodge objections under the Patent-law Amendment Act, 1852, and under Lord St. Leonards' Order of the 15th October, 1852, against the sealing of the patent, pending which, it is presumed, the Lord Chancellor would refuse to seal until the matter had been disposed of before the Judicial Committee. In the case referred to, such a course was taken, and on the petition to seal being called on, and the objectors appearing, and stating that a petition to the Judicial Committee was pending, the matter was ordered to stand over.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

WE continue our extracts from Mr. Coode's papers:—

"(8). And inasmuch as we possess in our institutions an instrument of legislation in the highest degree impressive, active, and practical; and inasmuch as the extent, importance, and variety of our interests are such that all legislation is instantly subjected to innumerable practical tests; and inasmuch as every defect is immediately submitted to jurisprudential and judicial scrutiny, and to unrestricted public discussion, and, if otherwise incurable, to legislative amendment, we do happily possess the most efficient possible means for realising, experimentally, practically, and inductively, whatever the experience and intelligence of man may shew to be desirable; in fact, the whole process of discussion, general, forensic, parliamentary—the whole course of judicature and legislation—is one great process of legislative induction, by which particulars are incessantly collected and arranged, and brought more and more precisely and certainly within their appropriate laws, and those laws extended and corrected with infinitely more certainty than that which the ablest systematiser could effect by the simple aid of the most enlightened and logical speculation.

"And this practical process of induction of particulars is even more unerringly systematic—tends more surely to sound generalisation—than any systematic speculation whatever. Every individual man's interest is identical in most respects with every other man's; and every man seeking to obtain for himself the institution or application of a rule of law most beneficial to himself does, in fact, seek for a rule beneficial in a like degree to all others in like circumstances. Every forensic discussion seeks, on one side, to place a given case within the operation of one rule; on the other side, to place it within the operation of another. Every judicial decision does place some one particular case, or some species of cases, within one rule or within another; and every additional particular, thus placed under the operation of a rule, serves to complete the rule in its range and in its definition. In no case does a judge make new rules; and in no case, where his decision is inconsistent with the combined analogies of the case and of the rule, can his decision be sustained. And in legislation the process is similar. Each case proposed for new legislation must be shewn to be included in the existing law, contrary to the real utilities and analogies of the case; it is never taken out of the old rule but upon apparent proof of a distinction in fact, requiring a distinction in the rule. Thus the tendency both of jurisprudence and legislation is inevitably to include all cases under rules analogous to them; to break down and abolish exceptions not justified by real distinctions; to enlarge exceptions into rules, when such exceptions may consistently be converted into rules; to extend the minutest experiments in legislation, when successful, to all the cases in which a similar success may be anticipated; and so, in fact, the law is undergoing, in experiment, in discussion before our tribunals, and in Parliament, a constant analogising process, tending to the widest possible useful generalisation.

"(9). But although this be the real practical process, it is unfortunately rendered obscure, and indeed seriously obstructed and retarded, by the present mode of registering the result. It is unfortunate that every step in the establishment and extension of a rule should only be registered, as it now is. The judicial result, giving effect, consistency, and definiteness to a rule, is overlaid by the narrative of the circumstances of the case, the recital of the pleadings, the report of the arguments of the counsel, and of the reasonings of judge; and the small modicum of result, the effective judicial decision, thus incumbered, reported by the reporter, is separated by an indefinite number of volumes of similar reports, and by intervals of years and ages, from its nearest analogue, the next judicial decision that extends or qualifies it. And just so the act of Parliament which extends or limits an old rule, introduces a new one, instead of being expressed as part of the terms of the rule thus modified, or in proper coordination with analogous rules, is registered in the statute-book according to the accidental date of its passing, incumbered with preambles and provisos, and a-obsolete clauses, dislocated from the body of law of which it is logically a member, and cast locally into a midst of others having no discoverable connexion with it. Thus we find that a rule, established and refined by centuries of experiment and discussion, and shaped elaborated with perfect self-consistency, is registered in disorderly and cumbrous fragments, in a mass of statutes, and a hundred reported cases.

"It is this unnecessary and mischievous incumbrance of the rule, by the mode in which it is thus accidentally registered, that is most justly to be complained of. It is that most impedes legislation, and so often uses it to be obscure, inaccurate, and inconsistent. It makes jurisprudence so laborious, and so often uncertain in its progress, and conceals, in husk and raff, the precious kernel of the law.

"(10). The first object, then, of the course proposed by these papers is, to ascertain the effect of the matter of the statute law, thus overlaid and dislocated, and the relations and connexion of all its parts, and to present them in intelligible language and lucid order. Besides the immediate popular utility involved in this operation, it will necessarily tend to enable the Legislature, on all subsequent occasions, with increased facility, comprehensiveness, and effect, to preserve in its future acts the connexion and order once realised, and to proceed directly, and with the least possible incumbrance, in its natural course of supplying all defects; they become visible, removing apparent anomalies, reconciling apparent inconsistencies, and by degrees, arising, by the light of experience, that minute, detailed, and pervading practical agreement between the laws themselves, and the interests they protect, which is the only consummation of simplification and system worth consideration in the development of a body of rational law."

In his first paper Mr. Coode treats of the collection of the existing statute law as distinguished from that which, being repealed or obsolete, is no longer in force; and after pointing out the deficiencies in the existing means of ascertaining the law, the frequent confusion of local and personal enactments with general enactments in the same act, the non-existence of any convenient, uniform, or accurate practice in referring to acts, and the frequent omission to refer in an act to prior enactments affected by it, and suggesting some improvements in the use of short titles and other modes of reference, Mr. Coode proceeds to consider the means of finding all the connected matter that is in force. The different modes in which an enactment may be repealed—absolute, limited or exceptional, qualified, conditional, suspended, problematical, fragmentary, complementary or exceptional, and virtual—are first discussed. As to virtual repeals—

"(31). Still more obscure than the foregoing are the indications of that large and constantly increasing mass of matter commonly designated as 'virtually repealed.' Generally this so-called 'virtual' repeal is supposed to be effected as a result of some obvious repugnancy or contrariety in different provisions, and essentially it in no way differs from the effect of so much of a similar repugnancy between different phrases, or in the terms of the same phrase, or of the same provision, within the same act.

"It is rare that the repugnancy is absolute—that the one provision is the absolute negative of the other. Where it is so the contrariety is manifest, the latter enactment repeals the former, and the difficulty of ascertaining which is in force and which is not is none at all, consisting of the simple process of comparison of the one with the other.

"But every degree of repugnance, less than that of absolute contradiction, down to the smallest shade of variance in effect, involves the difficulty of construction, which leaves every man in doubt which of the two rules applies to his case, and in what degree it is covered by the one or the other. These are the cases which embarrass the most careful, well-informed, and scrupulous men, breed questions innumerable and interminable for professional advice, occupy the courts of law with a great proportion of all their business, and rarely receive even from them a final or general solution. The determination, if it were possible by any authority short of that of the Legislature, of the fact of the abrogation of this immense and indefinite mass of law, and, by the converse operation of the process, the ascertaining of that complement which is left in force, would indeed be a mighty benefit. I have only to suggest that I, for one, am quite incompetent to do more in any such cases than discover some reason, on one side or the other, for the prevalence of my opinion towards one side or the other; but authoritatively to determine the questions of this kind seems to me to require no less an authority than that of the supreme judicature, which itself can never enlarge its decisions beyond the terms of the case before it, and of the Legislature itself where the general effect of such conflict is to be determined." (P. 19).

LONDON, DECEMBER 10, 1853.

THE Chancery Improvement Act, and the Orders made pursuant to it, having now been working for some time, we are enabled to speak with something more of precision of their operation than was possible when we were only speculating upon and foreseeing what would be their effect. On one point the anticipations expressed in this journal have been realised, viz. the error committed on the subject of evidence, in not at once boldly, while introducing viva voce evidence into the Court of Chancery, introducing the mode of taking and using it adopted in the courts of common law, viz. taking it at the hearing of the cause, and before the judge hearing the cause. Instead of that, as is well known, the evidence in a cause, when taken viva voce, is taken before examiners, whose powers are very limited, who have nothing to do with deciding the cause, and who, in fact, are not necessarily informed of the merits and points of the case on which they are to take the evidence. The evidence is taken down in voluminous depositions, which may, and do, ramble into endless fields of irrelevant matter; and the result is, that huge briefs are brought into existence, of evidence, not one-tenth part of which is often of any use whatever; while, on the other hand, the greatest advantages of viva voce evidence—viz. that resulting from the judge of the cause having the opportunity of seeing how the evidence bears on the matters in the cause as they are developed, and that resulting from his seeing the demeanour of the witness—are both practically given up.

The limitation of the power of the examiners to make a note of any objection to materiality or relevancy, instead of deciding it, may or may not be proper when the taking of evidence is delegated to examiners. On that we offer no opinion; but it is plain that it leads to the loading of a record with a great quantity of useless matter—an objection which resolves itself into a money consideration as regards the suitors, and militates much against the benefits to be derived by them from the new system. In a very few instances the Court has itself required the public examination of witnesses, and in every one of those instances the success of the experiment, in leading to a sound decision and a saving of time and expense, has been remarkable. It is quite a mistake to suppose that more time is consumed—that is, time paid for by the suitors or the public—when the evidence is taken at once viva voce before the judge at the hearing of the cause, than when it is taken as it now is. Even of the actual time of the judges themselves, it may be doubted whether as much of their time is not occupied in hearing the evidence brought to them from the examiners, as would be occupied if they themselves heard the examination, checking—nipping in the bud, as they would certainly do—all irrelevant rambling of the witnesses. But even supposing this not to be so, the fearful consumption of time, not only in taking the examination before the examiner, but in recording and repeating in the brief all the evidence, good, bad, or indifferent, would be avoided. It must not be forgotten, that according to the present practice, viewing it only in a money point of view, the evidence is really taken twice over—once before the examiner, and then before the Court. If the Court heard the examination at once, a little more time possibly might, though we do not think it usually would, be consumed in each trial; but the expense and delay attending the preparing for trial, would be much diminished.

We trust that in the ensuing session of Parliament, if the judges have no power—and we apprehend they have not—to act by General Orders, this defect of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, will be remedied, and that at any rate power will be given to any substantial party to a suit, to insist that the evidence shall be taken in a cause at the hearing, before the judge who tries it. And we trust also that the use of viva voce evidence will be extended, at the desire of either party, to motions. Motions are, in fact, preliminary trials; sometimes they are much more, and involve really all the substance of a case; and trying them by affidavits is shewn more and more to be unsatisfactory, the more it is compared with the trial of any real question upon oral evidence.

THE RIGHT TO SUE FOR INFRINGEMENT OF LITERARY COPYRIGHT.

THE right to sue for infringement of literary copyright, in ordinary cases, now depends upon the provisions of the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, which repealed the stats. 8 Ann. c. 19; 41 Geo. 3, c. 107; and 54 Geo. 3, c. 156. The act is remarkably ill-conceived, ill-drawn, and ill-expressed. Those parts of it which are material to the present inquiry are the following:—

In sect. 2 the word "copyright" is declared "to mean the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the said word is herein applied." The word "assigns" is declared "to mean and include every person in whom the interest of an author in copyright shall be vested, whether derived from such author before or after the publication of any book, and whether acquired by sale, gift, bequest, or by operation of law or otherwise."

The 11th section provides, "that a book of registry, wherein may be registered, as hereinafter enacted, the proprietorship in the copyright of books, and assignments thereof, and in dramatic and musical pieces, whether in manuscript or otherwise, and licenses affecting such copyrights, shall be kept at the Hall of the Stationers by the officer appointed by the said company for the purposes of the act," and shall be open to inspection, &c.; and copies of such entries, certified and stamped by the officer of the company, "shall be received in evidence in all courts and in all summary proceedings, and shall be prima facie evidence of the proprietorship or assignment of copyright or license as therein expressed, but subject to be rebutted by other evidence."

Sect. 12 declares any person wilfully making or causing to be made any false entry in the registry book guilty of a misdemeanour. This provision is material, as shewing the importance attached by the Legislature to the entry as prima facie evidence of title.

Sect. 13 declares that "it shall be lawful for the proprietor of a copyright in any book heretofore published, or in any book hereafter to be published, to make an entry in the registry book of the Stationers' Company of the title of such book, the time of the first publication thereof, the name and place of abode* of the publisher thereof, and the name and place of abode of the proprietor of the copyright of the said book, or of any portion of such copyright, in the form in that behalf given in the schedule to this act annexed, upon payment of the sum of 5s. to the officer of the said company."

Sect. 14 provides, "that if any person shall deem himself aggrieved by any entry made under colour of this act in the said book of registry," it shall be lawful for him to apply to the court or to a judge, who may order the entry to be expunged or varied.

Sect. 15 enacts, "that if any person shall, in any part of the British dominions, after the passing of this act, print or cause to be printed, either for sale or exportation, any book in which there shall be subsisting copyright, without the consent in writing of the proprietor thereof, or shall import for sale or hire any such book, so having been unlawfully printed†, from parts beyond the sea, or, knowing such book to have been so unlawfully printed or imported, shall sell, publish, or expose to sale or hire, or cause to be sold, published, or exposed to sale or hire, or shall have in his possession for sale or hire, any such book so unlawfully printed or imported, without such consent as aforesaid, such offender shall be liable to a special action on the case at the suit of the proprietor of such copyright, to be brought in any court of record in that part of the British dominions in which the offence shall be committed."

Sect. 16 enacts, that in any action brought within the British dominions against any person for printing any such book for sale, &c., the defendant, on pleading thereto, shall give to the plaintiff a notice in writing, of any objections on which he means to rely on the trial of such action; and if the nature of his defence be, that the plaintiff in such action was not the author or first publisher‡ of the book in which he shall by such action claim copyright, or is not the proprietor of the copyright therein, or that some other person than the plaintiff was the author or first publisher of such book, or is the proprietor of the copyright therein, then the defendant shall specify in such notice the name of the person who§ he alleges to have been the author or first publisher of such book, or the proprietor of the copyright therein, together with the title of such book, and the time when and the place where such book was first published, otherwise the defendant in such action shall not at the trial or hearing of such action be allowed to give any evidence that the plaintiff in such action was not the author or first publisher of the book in which he claims such copyright as aforesaid, or that he was not the proprietor of the copyright therein; and at such trial or hearing no other objection shall be allowed to be made on behalf of such defendant than the objections stated in such notice, or that any other person was the author or first publisher of such book, or the proprietor of the copy-

* The forms in the schedule contain, in lieu of the publisher's place of abode, the place of publication.

† "So unlawfully printed" here means "so printed without consent," not "so printed in any part of the British dominions."

‡ There is nothing in the act to shew that any right can be derived from first publication. The expression is used for a different purpose in the 3rd section. Perhaps a defence founded on first publication abroad, under the 14th section of the International Copyright Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 59, was contemplated.

§ Sic.

ght therein, than the person specified in such notice, give in evidence in support of his defence any other book than one substantially corresponding in title, name, and place of publication with the title, time, and place specified in such notice.

Sect. 17 prohibits the importation of printed copies.

Sect. 24 enacts, "that no proprietor of copyright in any book which shall be published after the passing of his act shall maintain any action or suit at law or in equity, or any summary proceeding, in respect of any infringement of such copyright, unless he* shall, before commencing such action, suit, or proceeding, have caused an entry to be made in the book of registry of the Stationers' Company of such book†, pursuant to his act: provided always, that the omission to make such entry shall not affect the copyright in any book, but only the right to sue or proceed in respect of the infringement thereof as aforesaid." (Murray v. Bogue, 17 Jur., part 1, p. 220; 1 Drew. 353).

Confining our attention to the right to sue for infringements of copyright under the statute of the 5 & 6 Vict., it is to be noticed, in the first place, that no "proprietor of copyright" in any book first published after the passing of the act can maintain any action or suit, or any summary proceeding, in respect of any infringement of such copyright, unless he shall, before commencing such action, &c., have registered his title at Stationers' Hall. (Sect. 24). This enactment is confined in terms to proprietors of copyright, and questions may arise as to its applicability to licensees and purchasers of "editions." An exclusive license to use a patented invention throughout the whole district covered by the patent, and for the remainder of the patent term, has been held not to vest the privileges granted by the letters-patent, or the trust of them, in the licensee, within the meaning of the condition against assignments to more than twelve persons, which was formerly inserted in letters-patent. Parke, B., inquired, during the argument, if it was contended that the licensee was to be considered as part of the patent. (Protheroe v. May, 5 M. & W. 675). But that decision is generally considered to be erroneous. However that may be, mere licensees generally stipulate that the patentee shall sue all infringers; although it seems that a licensee may sue in his own name for special damages. (George v. Beaumont, Webst. Pat. 24, note).

Patented inventions are very commonly worked under licenses which confer no exclusive privilege, the licensee paying a royalty or other consideration for the license, and submitting to the competition of any other manufacturers who may obtain the same permission on similar terms. Such a licensee clearly has no interest in the patent itself, although even he is, perhaps, entitled to sue a pirate in respect of any special damage he may have sustained from the infringement. But the practice with respect to copyright is different. Sometimes a publisher prints and sells a book merely as agent for the proprietor; (Nicol v. Stockdale, 3 Swanst. 687); if he prints on his own account, he has purchased either the entire copyright or a license to print an edition. A license to print a book is almost invariably an exclusive license, and the meaning of the parties, though it is seldom explicitly declared, is by the custom of the trade understood to be, that the licensee shall have the privilege of printing a certain number of copies, called an "edition," and that no other copies shall be printed by any other person until his edition is sold off. When a work is printed from moveable types, as many copies as the speculator thinks will be required are struck off, and the types are then distributed, or rather they are distributed from time to time, as each sheet is printed off, during the course of the work through the press. This impression constitutes an edition, and the work is not again printed until that edition has been sold off. Under special circumstances the proprietor of the edition determines or is induced to sacrifice the monopoly of the copies for the time being on hand, in order to make way for a new edition, with increased attractions. Sometimes a "remainder" is sold to another bookseller, on the understanding that a new edition may be published forthwith. (See Banning v. Dove, 5 Car. & P. 427). When a work of a permanent nature is stereotyped, the copies are taken off from time to time as they are required; and the term "edition," when applied to works so printed, does not express a fixed number of copies, but is used merely to distinguish the different forms in which the work may be printed, as "the stereotype edition," "the library edition," &c. Engraved music, &c. stands on the same footing. When a stereotyped work is not printed on the account of the proprietor of the copyright, the right of printing is regulated by a special agreement, the terms of which are very different in different cases. Sometimes the licensee keeps an account, and pays a royalty, according to the number of copies sold. Sometimes he purchases a fixed number of copies, or the right to print so many, and the owner of the copyright undertakes that no more copies shall be taken until that impression is sold off. Sometimes the use of the plates is granted for a fixed time, with special provisions for the disposal of the copies on hand at the end of the term. But generally, whenever an edition of a work is printed on the account of a publisher, under a license from the author, it is an essential term in the contract, though one which is seldom expressed, that no other copies shall be made until the "edition" has been sold off, or is "out of print." In Sweet v. Cater (11 Sim. 578) the publisher, by agreement with the author, was to print a certain number of copies on his own account, and to sell them at a certain price. It was held he had "obtained a right in the copyright of the work to the extent that he was to be at liberty to be the sole publisher of it until the whole edition, consisting of 2500 copies, should be sold. He therefore was an assign of the copyright in a limited sense." The injunction being granted on the usual conditions, that the plaintiff would undertake to try his right at law, and the author declining to permit his name to be used, the defendants were ordered to admit at the trial that the plaintiff was the legal proprietor of the copyright in the edition in question. (See Simms v. Murray, 20 L. J., Q. B., 454).

There is, therefore, some ground to contend that the proprietor of an edition of a work, under an agreement in writing, is a legal assign of the copyright for an uncertain term, and must register his title before he can sue for infringements. If he is not to be considered a proprietor of the copyright within the 24th section of the act, he may sue without registering his title, for the remedy given to the proprietor by the 12th section of the act does not exclude the common-law remedy founded on the general rights established by the act. (Beckford v. Hood, 7 T. R. 628; Novello v. Suddow, 16 Jur., part 1, p. 689). But his title to sue must, it seems, be founded on some agreement or license in writing, for a consent in writing is required by the 15th section to authorise the printing &c. of a copyright work. In this respect the act agrees with the older acts. It may be a question, however, whether this provision applies to a license to print a work not previously published. In Knaplock v. Curle, (Vin. Ab., tit. "Books," 3), Lord Macclesfield said that the bare delivery of the copy by the author to be printed was an authority to the printer to print that edition only; and in Carey v. Kearsley, (4 Esp. 169), Lord Ellenborough said, "that at law the first publisher, even though he has abused his trust by procuring the copy, has a right to it, and to an action against a person who publishes it without authority from him." The case shews that by "copy" his Lordship meant the information embodied in the copy. It is remarkable that the act requires registration of title as a condition precedent to any proceedings against the infringer of copyright "in any book first published after the passing of this act." (Sect. 24). This provision cannot apply to the author of a work in MS. who has not authorised any publication of it, for the entry on the register is required to express the date of the first publication.

* That is to say, the proprietor suing.

The next question is as to the proof of a title as proprietor of the copyright. The original proprietor is necessarily the author, and as a license to print is expressly required to be in writing, it follows that an assignment must also be by writing. The statute of Anne required a license to be attested by two witnesses, and therefore an assignment of copyright prior to the statute of Victoria also required two witnesses. (Davidson v. Bohn, 6 C. B. 456). The mistake has been committed of regarding copyright as in the nature of an incorporeal hereditament, requiring a deed for its transfer; (De Pinna v. Polhill, 8 Car. & P. 78); and it has even been supposed that the statute of Victoria implies the necessity of a deed to a transfer otherwise than by registration, because it declares (sect. 14) that a transfer on the register shall be of the same force and effect as if it had been made by deed. But that merely means effect by way of estoppel, implying a consideration, &c. Entry on the registry at Stationers' Hall is declared to be prima facie evidence of title, but subject to be rebutted by other evidence. Persons wilfully making false entries are punishable, and a remedy is given to any person aggrieved by any entry to have it expunged or corrected. We shall here repeat some remarks on the effect of the enactment which have already appeared in The Jurist. (12 Jur., part 2, p. 224). When the author's name is on the title-page, and he is the proprietor, an entry under the statute is superfluous as a matter of evidence; and therefore an entry of proprietorship by some one claiming as assignee must have been intended. If a person who has no title procure himself to be registered as proprietor, how is his prima facie title under the registry to be rebutted? It is evidence of his title at the date of the entry. It cannot, therefore, be rebutted by shewing that at some time prior to the entry some other person was entitled, for non constat that the prior title has not determined; and in the case supposed there must necessarily have been a time when some other person, namely, the author, was entitled. The prima facie case made by the entry can, therefore, be rebutted only by proof of a subsequent alienation by the person registered as proprietor, or by proof that the alleged copyright never existed at all in any person, (as by shewing a prior publication abroad), or that it has determined, or by calling the author, or some one who proves a title under him prior to the registration, to prove that no assignment has been made to the plaintiff. If another person claims to be entitled to the copyright, his remedy is to apply to the court or a judge for an order to expunge the entry, which will be granted, we presume, with costs, if the registered proprietor do not regularly prove his title. This provision, and that which makes the wilful procuring of a false entry a misdemeanour, are quite sufficient to prevent any ill use being made of the enactment, which thus in a very efficient and unobjectionable manner relieves the plaintiff from the trouble and expense of proving his proprietorship in all cases when that fact is not in dispute. The effect of the enactment was discussed on the trial of Boosey v. Purday, but no light was thrown on it, the Chief Baron holding that proof of a first publication abroad was fatal to the existence of any copyright here*.

* Our readers will remember that the decision of the Court

The construction here suggested is encountered by the authority of Davidson v. Bohn, (6 C. B. 456; 12 Jur., part 1, p. 922), which was an action for the infringement of the plaintiff's copyright in certain songs. The plaintiff had registered his title to all of them under the act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. The songs had all been composed long before the passing of that act. The plaintiff claimed under assignments from the composers, and it is stated in The Jurist report, that, his title by registration being rebutted by evidence on the part of the defendant, he was driven to prove it by other means; and the original assignments by the authors (long prior to the act of Victoria) having been by parol, except one, which was by deed attested by one witness, it was held that the title was not proved, the statute of Anne requiring licenses, and therefore a fortiori assignments of copyright, to be in writing, attested by two witnesses. It is submitted that this decision cannot be supported, unless, which does not appear, there was some distinct evidence on the defendant's part inconsistent with the assumption that the plaintiff had any title at the date of the registry. The statute of Victoria does not require a license to be attested.

In Stevens v. Wildy (19 L. J., Ch., 190) the bill, filed by the author and publishers of a work for relief against piracy, stated that the work had been composed and published for the joint benefit of the plaintiffs, who had been duly registered at Stationers' Hall as the proprietors. The registration of the joint title was the first and only entry relating to the work, no entry of the author's proprietorship, or of an assignment by him, having been made. The Vice-Chancellor held that the title was sufficiently proved, and that the author had a right to associate with himself in the title, by registry under the act, any person he pleased.

In equity, relief will be granted upon a title which is not a legal title; and it has been granted upon a title under a parol contract part performed. (Longman v. Ozberry, Gods. Pat. 429; Sweet v. Shaw, 3 Jur. 217; 17 L. J., Ch., 216; Sweet v. Maugham, 4 Jur. 456, 479; 18 L. J., Ch., 323. See Colburn v. Duncombe, 9 Sim. 161, and Simms v. Marryat, 20 L. J., Q. B., 454). In Morris v. Kelly (1 J. & W. 481) an injunction was granted upon an affidavit of an assignment in writing having been made to the plaintiff by a party claiming as assignee, without any statement that the first assignment was by writing. The Court left it for the defendant to prove that the plaintiff's title was not regular. This is not quite satisfactory. Rundell v. Murray (Jac. 311) may be cited in favour of establishing an equitable title by parol; for though there the defendant did not establish a title by parol, he established a parol license to print, which is equally, or rather, more directly, contrary to the letter of the statute. And see Barfield v. Nicholson, (2 L. J., O. S., Ch., 102), stated below.

With respect to encyclopædias and periodicals, the 18th section of the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, enacts, "that when any publisher or other person shall, before or at the time of the passing of this act, have projected, conducted, and carried on, or shall hereafter project, conduct, and carry on, or be the proprietor of any encyclopædia, review, magazine, periodical work, or work published in a series of books or parts, or any book whatsoever, and shall have employed or shall employ any persons to compose the same, or any volumes, parts, essays, articles, or portions thereof, for publication in or as part of the same, and such work, of Exchequer in Boosey v. Purday (13 Jur., part 1, p. 918) was discussed at some length in The Jurist. (14 Jur., part 2, p. 46). That decision was overruled in the Exchequer Chamber, in accordance, we believe, with the general opinion of the Profession. (Boosey v. Jefferys, 15 Jur., part 1, p. 540; 6 Exch. 580). But the piratical publishers have carried the litigation into the House of Lords, where the question is now pending.

dumes, &c. shall have been or shall hereafter be composed under such employment, on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to such proprietor, &c., and paid for by such proprietor, &c., the copyright in every such encyclopædia, review, magazine, periodical work, and work published in a series of books or parts*, and in every volume, part, essay, article, and portion composed and paid for, shall be the property of such proprietor, &c., who shall enjoy the same rights as if he were the actual author thereof, and shall have each term of copyright therein as is given to the authors of books by this act; except only that in the case of essays, articles, or portions forming part of and not published in reviews, magazines, or other periodical works of a like nature†, after the term of twenty-eight years from the first publication thereof respectively, the right of publishing the same in a separate form shall revert to the author for the remainder of the term given by this act. Provided always, that during the term of twenty-eight years the said proprietor, &c. shall not publish any such essay, article, or portion separately or singly without the consent‡ previously obtained of the author thereof or his assigns. Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect the right of any person, who shall have been or shall be so employed as aforesaid, to publish any such his composition in a separate form, who, by any contract, express or implied, may have reserved or may hereafter reserve to himself such right; but every author reserving, retaining, or having such right shall be entitled to the copyright in such composition when published in a separate form, according to this act, without prejudice to the right of such proprietor, &c. as aforesaid."

On this section a question has been raised, whether the publisher of a periodical, &c. has under that section any copyright in an article which he has not paid for. The language is certainly involved, but it is not ambiguous in terms. The words are, when any publisher or other person shall have projected, conducted, and carried on, or shall hereafter project &c., any encyclopædia, &c., and shall have employed or shall employ any persons to compose the same, or any volume, parts, essays, articles, or portions thereof, for publication in or as part of the same, "and such work, volumes, &c. shall have been or shall hereafter be composed under such employment, on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to such proprietor, projector, publisher, or conductor, and paid for by such proprietor, &c. The literal meaning is—when such book shall have been or shall be composed under such employment, on the terms, &c., and [shall have been or shall be] paid for. All doubt is removed by the subsequent words, which declare the ownership of the copyright in every volume "so composed and paid for." The question, however, has been treated as arguable. (Brown v. Cooke, 11 Jur., part 1, p. 77; Richardson v. Gilbert, 1 Sim., N. S., 336). But though the grammatical construction makes actual payment a condition precedent to the acquisition of the copyright, the meaning seems to be merely that the proprietor shall buy the article; and whether he buys it for ready money or on credit is immaterial. When the effect of the clause is carefully considered, "paid for" will probably be held to mean "purchased for a pecuniary or valuable consideration." If that were not so, there would be no protection for the proprietor of a newspaper. He could not pay for every report and contribution at or before the moment of publication; and if his copyright depended on such prompt payment, it could not exist during the few hours in which alone it would be valuable. Nor could it have been intended to put the proprietor of any other serial work to the inconvenience of being obliged to pay for each contribution promptly on publication. On the other construction, the copyright in the interval would be, both at law and in equity, in the author, and he might authorise any other person to make copies, the sale of which copies, once authorised by the owner of the copyright, could not afterwards be restrained; otherwise the reservation of the author's right would be ineffectual; for non constat that he will ever be paid. The intention to shift the copyright from the author to the projector at the moment of payment is too absurd to be imputed to the Legislature. Another construction may be, that payment vests the title by relation from the day of publication.

It is important to notice, with respect to this enactment, that the projector of a work, who employs various writers to carry his plan into effect, has been considered to be entitled to the copyright under the statute of Anne. (Barfield v. Nicholson, 2 L. J., O. S., Ch., 102). Sir J. Leach, V. C., said, "I am of opinion, that under that statute, the person who forms the plan and who embarks in the speculation of a work, and who employs various persons to compose different parts of it, adapted to their own peculiar acquirements—that he, the person who so forms the plan and scheme of the work, and pays different artists of his own selection, who, upon certain conditions, contribute to it, is the author and proprietor of the work—if not within the literal expression, at least within the equitable meaning, of the statute of Anne, which, being a remedial law, is to be construed liberally." Whether the statute of Anne is strictly capable of that interpretation or not, there can be no doubt that at the common law the copyright in such a work, and in every article contained in it, would belong to the projector; and there is strong ground for contending that the recent Copyright Act has not taken away the common-law right. (See Boosey v. Tolkien, 5 C. B. 476). The copyright intended by Sir J. Leach, V. C., in Barfield v. Nicholson was not the right to the name and plan of the publication, about which there could be no doubt, (Hogg v. Kirby, 8 Ves. 215; Seeley v. Fisher, 11 Sim. 581), but the right to the individual article contained in it. In Wyatt v. Barnard (3 V. & B. 77) an injunction to restrain the piracy of translations originally appearing in a periodical called "The Repertory of Arts" was granted by Lord Eldon upon an affidavit that they were made by a person employed and paid by the plaintiff, from foreign books imported by the plaintiff at a considerable expense.

If, in cases not within the 18th section, the projector of an encyclopædia, &c. has a copyright in the various contributions by implied contract, that copyright must necessarily be either a perpetual copyright at common law, or a right for the period given to the author by the statute, i. e. the term of the author's life and seven years more, or a term of forty-two years from the first publication, whichever is longest. But in cases within the 18th section the proprietor is to enjoy the same rights as if he were the actual author, and to have such term of copyright as is given to authors. This must mean, if the proprietor is a single person, a copyright for his own life and seven years more, or forty-two years, as the case may be. If the proprietorship is in several persons, the term of seven years must, it is conceived, be calculated from the death of the survivor, even though there is no right of survivorship; and the term of forty-two years must be calculated from the day of the publication of the particular part in which copyright is claimed, and the life or lives must be the life or lives of the actual legal proprietors on the day of publication. If the proprietor were a corporation there would be a difficulty.

* The words "or any book whatsoever" are not repeated here.

† Encyclopædias and serial works, not of the nature of a review or magazine, are excluded from this provision. (See The Bishop of Hereford v. Griffin, 16 Sim. 194).

‡ This consent is not required to be in writing.

The words "on the terms that the copyright therein shall belong to such proprietor," &c. were intended, it is conceived, to provide for the case of an actual agreement to the contrary; for when the proprietor of an encyclopædia, &c. engages writers to contribute articles for reward, the inference is inevitable that he purchases the copyright, if nothing is said to the contrary. The decision in The Bishop of Hereford v. Griffin (12 Jur., part 1, p. 255; 16 Sim. 190) cannot, it is conceived, be supported. There the assignee of the copyright of an encyclopædia was, on the application of the author of an article in it, restrained from publishing the article separately, though the author's affidavit merely negatived any express agreement that the copyright was to belong to the proprietors for all purposes. The Vice-Chancellor said, "The copyright was in the author, except so far as he parted with it; therefore no reservation was necessary to constitute a right in him." That is not so; if the projector takes any interest in the copyright under the act, he takes the whole, unless a contrary agreement is shewn. In the latter part of the section the possibility of there being an implied reservation by the author of the right to publish in a separate form is recognised.

Even where no copyright is acquired under the 18th section by the proprietor of a periodical, he would, it is conceived, be entitled to prevent the publication by another of any of the articles in a manner calculated to injure his interest in the original work; for the authors of the articles could not treat the original publication, which they had themselves sanctioned, as unauthorised, merely for the want of a written license; and their employment by the proprietor would imply an engagement that they should not reprint their contributions, so as to interfere with the sale of his edition; still less would a stranger be allowed to do so. In this view the decision in Brown v. Coote (11 Jur., part 1, p. 77) seems to have been wrong.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

WE continue our extracts from Mr. Coode's papers:—

This is followed by some remarks on the difficulty of dealing with subjects that have become complicated by successive amendments, and with obsolete provisions, of which we give the conclusion:—

"(34). As to all these cases of unexpressed repeals, even of repeals expressed but not defined, and as to all this so-called virtual repeal and abrogation and supersession of law, and all the obsolescence of laws still allowed by the Legislature to retain the form and apparent force of law, there appears to me but one safe and unobjectionable course to pursue; that is, to collect together all the matter in eadem materia under the heads in respect of which such matter has any similitude. By this digestion and juxtaposition of alternative and incongruous, non-coincident, and it may be contradictory matters, their multiply or repugnant character would be made manifest, and the Legislature, which has deliberately created all the accumulated matter, and which has not manifested a clear intention of abrogating any of it, will then have present to it the means and the opportunity to declare definitively, with that authority which only rightfully resides in itself, what of such law shall henceforth remain 'in force,' and what shall henceforth be 'not in force.' The process of ascertaining such connexion and interoperation of the statutes, so far as their connexion is manifest in their terms or is deducible from intrinsic evidence, is the subject of the remainder of this paper. The process of the digestion of this connected matter is the subject of the next following paper.

"(35). Although it is impossible, without performing all the processes required in an exhaustive and complete consolidation of the law, to determine conclusively what is absolutely in force and what is absolutely not in force, still the daily operations of every lawyer, and the preliminary operations of the members of this commission, must involve the consideration and determination of some portion, and in the case of this commission a large portion, of this question.

"What is certain is, that when this operation is well performed by any one person in any one case, it might, if duly registered, save all the trouble of the operation to every other person to whom the results were communicated; one person's labour applied to the task might, in this respect, save the equal labour of all the rest; and, indeed, more than this, inasmuch as his continuous and undivided labour would give him more facilities for the performance of all the parts than would be possessed by any other.

"The register, of which a specimen is appended to this paper, is offered as a means of registering these facts exhaustively, and of continuing the registration from year to year, concurrently with the operations of the Legislature, until a comprehensive and effectual and sustained consolidation of the statute law renders it unnecessary, as it would do.

"(36). The specimen is partial as to its contents, being primarily intended to aid the labours of this commission, and therefore confined to the subjects which our instructions direct us to deal with, omitting all details of legislation as to finance and military matters, and Scotch and Irish matters, and, by an extension in presumed consistency with these instructions, all other matters specially relating to the administrative or executive government, to international or diplomatic affairs, and to the colonies.

"What remains is dealt with in the manner proposed in relation to all the acts of the present session (16 Vict.) published when the operation stopped, and to the whole of the acts of the previous session, (15 & 16 Vict.)

"(37). The reason for commencing with the most recent, and proceeding regularly backwards to the earliest, acts of legislation is obvious. The last act must be in force, unaffected by subsequent legislation, and it may itself affect indefinitely any number of antecedent acts. It is a simple course at once to register all its ascertainable operations upon those acts, by erasure of those acts, by interpolations in their text or on their margin, and by the insertion of all these effects in the proper columns in such a register as the present. But as to any act of an earlier time, it is impossible to ascertain, upon its face or in its terms, what its operation is upon subsequent legislation, or how it is operated upon by it, and anything noted or registered, as ascertained by its terms, may be afterwards discovered to be rendered of no effect, upon ascertaining the operation of some subsequent act. To begin, then, with the last legislation, and to proceed backwards, is to proceed surely, with the absolute certainty of discovering the repeals, continuances, revivals, amendments, at that place where they can be at once noted and registered, without a possibility of subsequent discovery rendering the labour useless. A further reason is, that to deal first with the most recent legislation is to operate upon that part of the law which is of the most instant importance and utility.

"(38). The register contains, in the first column, headed 'Statute,' the designation of each act by the reign and chapter, and of every section by its number.

"For nothing less than the examination of every section can discover what law is in force, what amended, that abrogated. Amendments, repeals, express or virtual, constantly lurk in single sentences, phrases, words. The greatest act may be repealed by the most obscure clause in another, not indicated by the title or in the margin, and only discoverable by the perusal of the words; and, conversely of the matter passively affected by amendment or repeal, whatever is affected by general or comprehensive repeals must be discovered by the like minute perusal of the matter affected.

"Accordingly, this specimen exhibits several instances even of single clauses partly amended, partly repealed, part operating or operated upon one way, another part another.

"(39). The second column, headed 'SS,' is to exhibit the total number of sections in each act. They may be added up at the end of the session, or for any period, great or little, and give any result required as to the number of sections in any number of acts.

"This column is not of much utility, but it costs almost no labour or space.

"(40). The next column, headed 'Subjects,' shortly indicates the subject of the act; and, as to acts relating to the subjects excluded in our instructions, indicates at the same time enough to shew the existence of such acts, and the reason why their contents are not analysed and examined section by section.

(To be continued).

PUBLIC EXAMINATION.—HILARY TERM, 1854.

THE Council of Legal Education have approved of the following rules for the public examination of the students.

The attention of the students is requested to the following rules of the Inns of Court:—

"As an inducement to students to propose themselves for examination, studentships shall be founded of fifty guineas per annum each, to continue for a period of three years, and one such studentship shall be conferred on the most distinguished student at each public examination; and further, the examiners shall select and certify the names of three other students who shall have passed the next best examinations, and the Inns of Court to which such students belong may, if desired, dispense with any terms, not exceeding two, that may remain to be kept by such students previously to their being called to the Bar. Provided that the examiners shall not be obliged to confer or grant any studentship or certificate unless they shall be of opinion that the examination of the students they select has been such as entitles them thereto."

"At every call to the Bar those students who have passed a public examination, and either obtained a studentship or a certificate of honour, shall take rank in seniority over all other students who shall be called on the same day."

"No student shall be eligible to be called to the Bar who shall not either have attended during one whole year the lectures of two of the Readers, or have satisfactorily passed a public examination."

RULES FOR THE PUBLIC EXAMINATION OF CANDIDATES FOR HONOURS, OR CERTIFICATES ENTITLING STUDENTS TO BE CALLED TO THE BAR.

An examination will be held in next Hilary Term, to which a student of any of the Inns of Court, who is desirous of becoming a candidate for a studentship or honours, or of obtaining a certificate of fitness for being called to the Bar, will be admissible.

Each student proposing to submit himself for examination will be required to enter his name at the treasurer's office of the Inn of Court to which he belongs on or before Wednesday, the 4th day of January next; and he will further be required to state in writing whether his object in offering himself for examination is to compete for a studentship or other honourable distinction, or whether he is merely desirous of obtaining a certificate preliminary to a call to the Bar.

The examination will commence on Wednesday, the 11th day of January next, and will be continued on the Thursday and Friday following.

It will take place in the Benchers' Reading-room of Lincoln's-inn; and the doors will be closed ten minutes after the time appointed for the commencement of the examination.

The examination by printed questions will be conducted in the following order:—

Wednesday morning, the 11th January, at half-past nine, on Constitutional Law and Legal History; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on Equity.

Thursday morning, the 12th January, at half-past nine, on Common Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, on the Law of Real Property, &c.

Friday morning, the 13th January, at half-past nine, on Jurisprudence and the Civil Law; in the afternoon, at half-past one, a paper will be given to the students including questions bearing upon all the foregoing subjects of examination.

The oral examination will be conducted in the same order, during the same hours, and on the same subjects, as those already marked out for the examination by printed questions, except that on Friday afternoon there will be no oral examination.

The oral examination of each student will be conducted apart from the other students; and the character of that examination will vary according as the student is a candidate for honours or a studentship, or desires simply to obtain a certificate.

The oral examination and printed questions will be founded on the books below mentioned, regard being had, however, to the particular object with a view to which the student presents himself for examination.

In determining the question, whether a student has passed the examination in such a manner as to entitle him to be called to the Bar, the examiners will principally have regard to the general knowledge of law and jurisprudence which he has displayed.

A student may present himself at any number of examinations, until he shall have obtained a certificate.

Any student who shall obtain a certificate may present himself a second time for examination as a candidate for the studentship, but only at one of the three examinations immediately succeeding that at which he shall have obtained such certificate; provided, that if any student so presenting himself shall not succeed in obtaining the studentship, his name shall not appear in the list.

Students who have kept more than ten terms shall not be admitted to an examination.

THE READER ON CONSTITUTIONAL LAW and LEGAL HISTORY will expect all students to answer any general questions relating to the History of England, and to be well acquainted with the History of the Reigns of James I and Charles I, the Civil War, and the Reigns of Charles II and James II.

The candidates for distinction will be expected to know the progress of our institutions, and the changes of our Constitution. They will be examined as to the details of the Parliamentary struggles and of the State Trials during the above-mentioned reigns, and also the progress of Constitutional Law. They will also be required to answer questions on the Treaties between this Country and the States of Europe during the same period.

The books for the ordinary examination will be Hallam, Rapin, and Blackstone.

Those for the candidates for distinction will be Hallam, Rapin, Burnet's History of his own Times, Sir W. Temple's Letters and Memoirs, Lord Clarendon's History and Life, May's History, and the State Trials.

SALE BY AUCTION of ROBERTS'S "HOLY LAND."

SOUTHGATE & BARRETT beg to announce that they have received instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 22, Fleet-street, London, on THURSDAY EVENING, Dec. 15, 1853, and following Evenings, the entire remaining Copies of ROBERTS'S HOLY LAND, EGYPT, NUBIA, SYRIA, IDUMEA, and ARABIA.

The Work is complete in Forty Parts, and was published by Mr. Alderman Moon (who has retired from business) at Forty-one Guineas, under which price it has never yet been sold.

The Drawings were made on the spot by DAVID ROBERTS R. A., and have been executed in the first style of Lithography by M. LOUIS HAGHE. They are accompanied by Historical and Descriptive Letterpress, written by the Rev. Dr. CROLY.

The Artist, whose fame has mainly resulted from Pictures of this class, entered into the work with a deep and earnest love of his great theme. The subjects embrace every variety. Among the 250 Prints of which the Work is composed are found Views of Jerusalem, the Holy Sepulchre, the Mount of Olives, Bethlehem, the Sea of Tiberias, Lebanon, Tyre, and other places of interest in the Holy Land; of the Ruins of Petra, Mount Sinai, &c., in Idumea; and in Egypt and Nubia the reader is presented with the most faithful illustrations of their celebrated Antiquities. The entire series form a Work of rare attraction, not only in point of art, but affording also a rich fund of enjoyment and instruction to all who regard these spots as hallowed with the scenes and recollections of the past. The Artist has depicted the "East" as it is TO-DAY. These countries are becoming anew the centre of European interest and anxiety, from the position of the "Eastern Question," and the Work about to be offered for sale comprises undoubtedly the best, and indeed the only, complete series of pictorial illustrations relating to those localities which have ever been the subject of dispute, and even now threaten to be the seat of war.

Southgate & Barrett beg also to call particular attention to the circumstance, that the Copies which will be included in the forthcoming Sale will be the LAST that can ever be obtained, as the Drawings from which the impressions have been taken will all be EFFACED FROM THE STONES in the Rooms, and during the progress of the Sale, thereby furnishing the only sure guarantee that no inferior impressions can ever be issued, and securing to the Purchasers at the Sale the rarity and enhanced value of the present Copies.

It is also further announced, that an entire SET of this beautiful Work is now on view at the Offices of Messrs. Day & Son, Lithographers to the Queen, 17, Gate-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, London; and that a Descriptive List of the Plates (which will give Free Admission to Visitors) may be obtained of Southgate & Barrett, at their temporary Auction Rooms, 393, Strand, London, who will be happy to furnish any further information that may be required.

In conclusion, Southgate & Barrett feel it a duty to urge their friends and the public not to lose the present and only opportunity of obtaining the above important and interesting Work at a reduced price.

Catalogues of the Sale (when ready) will be forwarded by post, on the receipt of six postage stamps.

212<sup>d</sup> SAFES.—MILNERS' HOLDFASTS, fire-resisting by means of the only perfect non-conductor, vaporisation, are the strongest, best, and cheapest, because the only effectual safeguards against fire, robbery, or violence, for ledgers, deeds, cash, or valuables. Lord Chief Justice Campbell, in summing up on the late trials for infringement of Milners' Safes, was pleased to observe:—"He must say he had been astonished to find such strong evidence of their usefulness; up to this hour he had no idea that there were any human means of so effectually preserving papers from the action of fire. It was a comfort for one to know that there was such an invention, by which valuable documents might be rendered secure, notwithstanding the calamity of fire." As to whether it is useful, it appears to be allowed on all hands; it seems to be a most marvellous preservative against fire, for the water remains permanently held in artificial or natural vessels; and the very calamity brings the cure, for the heat releases the water or moisture, and then it is turned into steam, and the steam moistens the substance that is to be preserved, and so it is an effectual guard against fire.

LONDON, DECEMBER 17, 1853.

THE county court system is now sufficiently developed to enable the public and the legal profession to form a tolerably correct opinion of its merits and defects. It is generally acknowledged to possess the advantages of convenience, cheapness, and expedition; the procedure is simple; the distance for parties and their witnesses to travel to the court seldom exceeds a few miles. But that gross evils and abuses have crept into, or were originally connected with, these tribunals, is beyond dispute, and this is the proper time to call attention to them, when the learned men who compose the County Court Commission are actually engaged in their labours. We anticipate that much good will result from their investigations, but, at the same time, we feel that no measures will be effectual or satisfactory that do not tend to raise the character of the courts themselves. Many reforms in connexion with this subject are required, but not one so much as this; and we assert without hesitation that if these courts and those who preside over them be allowed to deteriorate in public estimation, as in too many recent instances they have, they will become so many sources of evil and mischief throughout the country.

Let us at once express the unfeigned respect which we feel towards several of the county court judges. We admit with pleasure that they are men not only of sound legal learning, but also of high principle; they are actuated by a sense of the deep responsibility attached to their office, by an unswerving resolution to dispense justice with an equal hand, and to exercise their functions strictly within the limits assigned by the law. Their decisions tend to produce uniformity and certainty in the jurisprudence now administered throughout the country, and increase that reverence for the laws which we have been apt to consider as a distinguishing feature in our national character. Far different is it with judges who, fitted neither by acquirements, nor habits, nor practice in the legal profession, have been suddenly thrust upon the judicial bench to decide questions of the greatest importance to the suitors who crowd their courts—judges who, disregarding the ancient landmarks which truly define their province, give one decision to-day, and a totally different one to-morrow, thus producing uncertainty and confusion in the rights and liabilities of many thousands—judges who, swayed by prejudice, or partiality, or class influences, or a desire for popularity, however unconscious of it themselves, pronounce judgment in defiance of evidence and rules of law, thus doing incalculable injury, besides irritating the sense of right which should be continually satisfied in the administration of public law, and making us smart beneath the severest wrong, that of oppression under the name of justice.

The property dealt with in these courts amounts to some millions in value every year, and the number of persons affected by their decisions comprehends the bulk of our population. Considering the vast interests which are thus at stake, and the nature of the duties which devolve upon the judges of these tribunals, we cannot help feeling that the appointments in many cases, from the very beginning, have been made most improperly, while there has also been an absence of due supervision since the appointments.

There are also several causes constantly in operation rendering county courts liable to serious abuses.

First, the judges are almost irresponsible. The proceedings before them are seldom reported in the public press, or, if reported, would be seldom read; and thus they may do any amount of injustice without arousing public opinion against them. The modern policy in these matters has been also to remove the check imposed by the attendance of the Bar, who would know something of the law enunciated from the Bench, and who would be sure to inform the public or the Lord Chancellor of any gross acts of misconduct.

Secondly, the localisation of the county court judge is a very serious evil. At present he frequently resides in the county for which he acts, and of course, therefore, if in the country, knows something of everybody around him. He mixes with a certain class there, but not with those above or below it; he regularly visits and dines with some of its members; they may be plaintiffs or defendants in his court the next day after he has met them in the most friendly and intimate manner. Does he act impartially? He may sometimes do so—he may always intend to do so; but the man who would be wholly above such influences, and who would still hold the scales of justice with a steady hand, forms the exception, and not the rule, in human nature; and even if he does forget everything but his duty, still the public cannot know this, and they suspect the decision which is given by a judge for his friend, however pure the motive from which it may have proceeded. Let justice, if you will, be brought to every man's door, but let it enter as few doors as possible.

The only remedy for this evil, which can scarcely be overrated, will be to prohibit any county court judge from residing in the county for which he acts; and we think it would be also advisable to render him in a manner itinerant, so that he may be constantly changing his district. We see no difficulty in adopting this course: the extra expense will be cheerfully borne by the public, and amply repaid to them.

The necessity for counteracting these degrading influences becomes daily more palpable; it is forced upon us by constant complaints which reach us, by some practical experience which we ourselves have had, and that of recent date, and by the disclosures, which do ooze out at times in our superior courts, relative to the doings of the inferior tribunals.

Let us have justice, but not the semblance of it, under the specious pretences of its being cheap, speedy, and convenient. The judges of Westminster Hall are above suspicion; why should we have a class of judges scattered throughout the country, some of whom are lower in public estimation than the "dusty-footed" suitors who come before them? Let us, amid our reforms, above all things keep the judgment-seat pure. The evil created and nourished by frequent injustice will swell into a national calamity; and it behoves every friend of law and order to avert it while he has the power.

(Members of the Council).

Robert Maugham, Law Society's Hall, Chancery-lane, (Secretary).

Dated the 6th December, 1853.

ROBERT MAUGHAM, Registrar of Solicitors.

The Right Hon. Sir John Jervis, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed the following Gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women:—John Dabbs, of Stamford, in the Parts of Kesteven, Lincolnshire, in and for the Parts of Kesteven, in the county of Lincoln, also in and for the counties of Northampton and Rutland; Frederick Cooper Farwell, of Wolverhampton, Staffordshire, in and for the county of Stafford.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

We continue our extracts from Mr. Coode's papers:—

"(41). The next column, headed 'Duration,' is of great importance as general information, but especially regards the consolidation of the law.

"It is only the permanent matter that greatly requires consolidation, or is worthy of so laborious and costly an operation; what is expired is excluded from all consideration except historical curiosity; what is executed of itself loses, in the spending of its force, all further interest; what has still a temporary duration has but a value and interest proportional to the time; the permanent and perpetual by the terms are infinite.

"At all events, the perpetual matter, however involved in the present framing of acts of Parliament, with the transitory, is the important subject of consideration in the process of consolidation.

"The large number of entries in this column indicating matter already expired, and of an occasional and transitory character, shews how much less than the whole of the legislation, even of the current session, is a subject for consolidation.

"In the process of compiling this register, every act or provision ascertained to have expired is so noted in the margin of the compiler's copy of the statutes, and the act or provision itself struck through with a pen. His copy thus becomes, as the operation proceeds, cleared of effete matter, and so far an expurgated edition.

"(42). The next two columns, headed respectively 'Amends' and 'Is amended by,' are the most important in the whole register, for they are to shew the subsisting relation and connexion of all the law at the time in force; what amends is not only important in itself, but is equally important as to what is amended by it, and indeed, with original matter unamended, constitutes the whole subsisting body of the law.

"And this consideration of amendment it is that constitutes almost all the difficulty of investigation, no conclusion about any statutory matter being safe until we are assured that that matter has not been amended; and when we know the series of amendments on a given law, we are in full possession of all the materials for judging of its effect.

"It is observed that these two columns correspond reciprocally. Every amendment in one act is an amendment operating upon another. Ascertaining, on the retrograde process before described, the amendment first, it is to be inserted in the column headed 'Amends;' but it is also, as a continuous part of the operation, to be noted in two other ways—first, upon the text or margin of the act or acts amended; and next, within the column headed 'Is amended by,' in the skeleton register prepared for the statute so amended.

"For example, the 16 Vict. c. 20, ss. 3—6, amends the 1st section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 27, and this fact is noted in the register of the session 16 Vict. under the head 'Amends,' and is likewise entered in the register of the session 15 & 16 Vict. under the head 'Is amended by,' and is noted in the compiler's copy of the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 27.

"Thus each amendment, as discovered, is displayed at once in reciprocal entries in these respective columns and in the compiler's copy of the statutes, which thus becomes, as the operation proceeds, a collated edition of the statutes, as amended by the most recent legislation.

"It is to be noted, that the word 'amends' in the heading of the register is used in a general sense, and includes all modifications operated upon matter still left, in whole or in part, in force—extensions, limitations, declaratory clauses, and the like; but the detailed entries in these columns, under the headings, always express the special modifications effected or suffered; and the notes made in the copy of the statutes are as much more minute and special as the case may require.

"(43). The next two columns, headed respectively 'Repeals' and 'Is repealed by,' are the columns of the next importance in the register. They shew all that subsequent legislation has abrogated of the antecedent legislation, and, with the preceding columns, will, if the register be ever completed, shew the entire amount of all the legislation that has been in force, and the amount by and to which it has been reduced by abrogation.

"Like the two preceding columns, the entries are reciprocal, the repeal being entered, when discovered in the latest statute, in the first of these columns, and entered again in the other column, in the proper place of the earlier statute or part of statute repealed; and at the same time a note is made in the compiler's copy of such earlier statute of the extent of the repeal operated on it; and when words, clauses, or statutes or acts are repealed, without exception or qualification, they are struck through by the pen; and thus the copy becomes an edition of the statutes with the repealed matter or matter superseded struck out or appropriately annotated, according to the nature of the case.

"(44). The annexed specimen refers only to so many of the acts of the present session as had been published at the beginning of June, when the work was stopped, and to the whole of the acts of the last session; but, as before observed, the entries of all amendments and repeals are notified reciprocally in the registers appropriated to the amended or repealed acts; and therefore every entry in this specimen of any amendment or repeal of any provision earlier than the 15 & 16 Vict. implies that a corresponding entry is made in some earlier part of this register not exhibited here.

"The entries thus made and not displayed in this specimen exceed 2000.

"In order to prepare the skeleton forms for this register, and with a view to the omission from them of the statutes excepted from consolidation, I have examined and prepared the nineteen volumes of statutes passed from the year 1800 to the year 1852.

"In this operation, and in those before referred to, deleting the expired and repealed matter, I have struck out of these nineteen volumes about 7000 pages and above 20,000 clauses, diminishing by this amount the future labour, if it is to be continued.

"(45). The origin of this register was the recognition of the necessity of ascertaining all the facts noted in the register in the course of carrying out the object of this commission, and the recognition of the other fact, that such work, when performed by one person, might be placed at the disposal of all others, and thus spare to all but one a great amount of tedious labour.

"But it is not to this commission alone that this register may be useful; it would be useful to every person who may have occasion to consult the statute-book; it would enable every person to expurgate his own copy of the statutes of all effete matter, and to note the connexion of what remains in force. I therefore suggest that it should be completed and published, and that the annual continuation of it should also be published at the end of every session, within a week or fortnight after the publication of the last act of the session.

"(46). I would also submit that the compiler's copy of the Statutes at Large, reduced in the course of this process by the expurgation of all expired provisions, and of all matters expressly repealed and superseded, and annotated with marginal references to all expressed amendments, should also be published by the authority of her Majesty's Government, not only because the matter contained in it would comprise the material for future amendment and consolidation, but because of the great utility to the public of an edition of the statutes thus expurgated and collated.

"(47). After a careful approximate estimate of the matter which would thus be prepared for publication, I obtained an estimate from the Queen's printers of the cost of a thousand copies of the expurgated and collated edition of the statutes, and am informed and feel assured that it would not exceed the sum of 720*l*.

"I have also endeavoured to estimate the time that the completion of this work would take, and allowing for the more rapid progress as the work proceeded, disencumbered as it would be at every step of all the matter disposed of in that step, it appears to me that, with the aid of three clerks, the entire work might be done in the course of two years.

"August, 1853.

"GEORGE COODE."

"II. ON THE DIGESTION OF THE MATERIALS FOR LEGISLATION AND CONSOLIDATION.

"On their analysis.

"On their recomposition.

"On their expression.

"With two appendixes:

the first, being suggestions as to the preparation of compilations of the existing law, to precede or accompany bills in Parliament;

the second, exemplifying the operation of digesting, being a digest of the acts for the relief of the poor.

"(48). The practical tendencies of English legislation, the invincible habit of providing law only for the occasion, and only so much of it as the present occasion immediately requires, is often urged as a matter of imputation upon us. Perhaps the juster view is, that it has been the means of forming, step by step, and with the constant test of practical experience, the most various, flexible, adaptable, and beneficial system of laws that has ever been developed in the world.

"Nor is our law in any respect wanting in so much even of real inherent systematic connexion of its subject-matter as is compatible with the realisation of minute and various and all-comprehensive utilities.

"It is true that it is almost singularly deficient in speculative provisions for abstract possibilities, and in logical extensions of its provisions to their logical consequences and extremities, and it follows that it wants the logical completeness which alone satisfies an educated, reflecting, and speculative reader, and the theoretic or professorial jurist.

"Its apparent systematic defects are still apparent only—superficial, not substantial; but it must be admitted that this appearance is in a very high degree disadvantageous to it. It is exaggerated, too, by almost every practice that negligence and, we may also say, perversity can provide for the production, multiplication, and perpetuation of detailed confusion and disorder.

"Still, blind and perverse as the practice may be, its formal defects have never interfered with the essential progress of our law to material completeness, substantial coherence, and practical consistency.

"(49). Whoever will collect the dispersed fragments of English law upon any subject, will find it, by comparison with any other system of law, and above all by comparison with the interests and circumstances to which it has been in succession and is now adjusted, complete to superabundance. He will find no division, no head, to which the most systematic analysis or the most methodical synthesis would conduct him, unfurnished with appropriate matter. His chief difficulty—often his only difficulty—will be, that the matter has been allowed to accumulate to excess by needless repetitions of nearly identical provisions, by nearly undistinguishable substitutions and alternatives, and above all by the enormous multiplication of provisions which have no longer a present utility or a possible application or illustration. His embarrassment will be with the superfluities, not with the deficiencies or inconsistencies of his subject-matter; and it will be aggravated by multitudes of positive incongruities in form and expression.

"(50). In such circumstances, for the realisation of all the uses of so immense an opulence, two things are chiefly necessary: the first, to put all the matter into order; the second, after a just comparison of their respective utilities, to remove what is superfluous. The first of these processes may be designated as 'Digestion,' the subject of this paper; the second as 'Consolidation,' the subject of the next following paper.

"No doubt, when the whole is cleared of its superfluities, the necessity, or at least the reasonableness and advantage, of many improvements in what remains will become evident; and the task of improvement, practical or systematic, will be made easy by the diminution of the quantity of the material in which it is to take effect. This subject of incidental and occasional 'amendment' is likewise the subject of the next paper, but more particularly of the fourth or last of the present papers.

"(51). The first thing to be done is to put the whole of the matter as it exists into such an order, that all similar objects may be brought into juxtaposition, for comparison, and selection or rejection; and it is not enough that every object of the same species be merely brought together—as, for instance, under their names in an alphabetical catalogue. It is indispensable for the success of the operation that every matter be judged of, not only by its relation to matters of an identical or of a similar kind, but by its due relation also to matters the most remote in their resemblance and connexion, if they be connected at all; for, after specific practical utility, rational self-consistency is of higher value in law than most other things.

"(52). The completeness, the over-completeness of details, and the necessity of comparing, not only the objects themselves and their analogues, but also their most remote connexions, all necessitate the same result—that the order in which the objects shall be arranged shall be both minute and comprehensive; shall, in short, be exhaustive as to the matter, and systematic as to its arrangement—that it shall be natural, displaying things in immediate connexion with those with which they have predominating and most numerous relations, and in their due connexion, close or distant, with all.

"(53). The law admits of this systematic and natural arrangement in a higher degree than almost any other subject; and the arrangement applicable to the whole body is invariably applicable, with the same happy effect, to every fragment, however minute, into which it can, by design or accident, be subdivided.

"It does not follow that the arrangement of any branch or portion of the law, to be perfect, requires as its condition the arrangement of the whole, or even of any of the more considerable parts. The arrangement of any connected part may, on very simple principles, be made perfect within itself; but the nature of the law is such, that no principle of arrangement but one is satisfactory, either as to the entire body, or as to any of its several portions.

"(54). The present purpose is to define the limits within which the whole of the matter is included, and the principles upon which the whole of its parts, whether presented in connexion or in fragments, must be displayed.

"The discussion will in some part be necessarily abstract, in a degree not required in any other part of these papers; but this discussion is absolutely requisite for the attainment of final agreement in the practical execution by many hands of the digestion or consolidation of many fragmentary portions of the law." (Pp. 41, 42).

We are compelled to omit the classification of legal subjects, and the illustrations which follow. They require for their proper appreciation, and deserve, attentive study.

ADMISSION OF ATTORNIES.—APPEAL FROM THE EXAMINERS.

By the Rules and Orders of the superior courts of law and equity, in case any candidate shall be dissatisfied with the refusal of the examiners to grant their certificate, he shall be at liberty, within one month, to apply for admission by petition in writing to the judges, which application shall be heard in Serjeants'-inn Hall by not less than three of the judges. A petition of appeal was presented by one of the twenty-three candidates who were rejected in Trinity Term last. The application was first heard on the 2nd instant, before Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Justice Maule, and Mr. Justice Williams, and adjourned to the 7th instant, when Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Justice Cresswell, and Mr. Justice Williams heard the appeal; and, having considered the questions and answers, (copies of which had been laid before them), their Lordships dismissed the appeal.

It is upwards of seventeen years since the examination of candidates for admission on the rolls of attorneys and solicitors was instituted. Nearly 400, on the average, are examined yearly, making in all about 5000 candidates who have been examined. This was the third appeal only. The whole number of attorneys in England and Wales is about 10,000. The number during the last ten years has but slightly increased; during the last two years it has somewhat decreased.

A QUESTION of great importance is at present pending before one of the Vice-Chancellors, viz. whether an appointment by a married woman having separate personal estate for life, with a general power to appoint by will, (but not by deed), renders the property appointed subject to those charges to which the separate life estate of the married woman would have been subject.

The general doctrine is quite clearly settled, that if a person sui juris has a general power of appointment by deed or will, or by deed or by will, and he makes an appointment, and then dies, that appointment makes the property, over which he has such a power, his own assets, so that the appointee takes subject to his debts.

It is also well and clearly settled, that although a married woman, having or not having separate estate, cannot, in the strict legal sense of the term, contract debts, yet that if, having separate estate, she does that which in a person sui juris would be contracting debts, a charge is raised in equity which attaches upon her separate estate; so that, though she could not be sued at law, equity will seize her separate estate, and there-out pay the equitable creditor. Therefore, if a married woman, having separate estate, were to borrow money on the credit of her separate estate, or to buy goods on such credit, and then die, leaving a fund consisting of arrears of her separate estate, unquestionably the creditor would get paid in equity out of such separate estate. But the question is, whether, having a mere power of appointment by will, so that she never could enjoy the fund to be appointed during her lifetime as her own separate estate, a married woman does, by appointing it by will, make it her separate estate, so as to charge it in the same way as she would impliedly charge her actual separate estate.

It may be argued that when a separate life estate in a fund is given to a married woman, with a power to appoint generally by will, then, inasmuch as she might appoint to her executor, and so make the fund her own, the power to appoint is a part of her separate estate, and that by exercising it, she makes the fund her separate property, and liable to any charges to which any of her admitted separate estate would be liable.

VOL. XVII.

X X

It may be argued also, that, as much with respect to a married woman having a power to appoint, as to a person sui juris, any such person having a general power to appoint a fund, which she might exercise for the purpose of paying her just debts, if she exercises it at all, shall be held to have exercised it for the purpose of doing justice, and to have made the fund her own, so as to be liable to her debts. But, on the other hand, it may be urged, that, strictly speaking, a married woman cannot contract debts. True, if she has separate estate, equity says that if she borrows or buys on the faith of that separate estate, there arises an implied charge upon the separate estate; not a liability of the married woman—for of that she is incapable—but a charge on her estate. But then that charge can only be on her separate estate. Is, then, property which she could never enjoy as separate estate, having no power to direct its disposition till after her death, her separate estate? It is true, that if, to use the common expression, she has run into debt, she might, if she pleased, appoint the fund to the persons nominally her creditors; and if she chose to do so, of course they would get paid—whether as donees or as creditors would of course be to them immaterial. But if she is incapable of contracting debts, properly so called, and she does not appoint to her quasi creditors, but to other objects, then the question is most material, whether, by appointing, she makes the fund her separate property or not. If she does, it would be subject, like any arrears of her life estate, to the implied charge on her separate estate.

Now, we confess, it does seem to us to be enormously difficult to treat, as the separate property of a woman, a fund over which she has no irrevocable power of disposition in favour of herself. If a married woman has a power of appointment by deed, she may charge the property—she may appoint it to herself—she may irrevocably secure to herself the enjoyment of it; but if she has only the power to appoint by will, how can it be said that she can fix upon it any irrevocable charge? How, therefore, can it be said that she can make it her separate property? The very meaning of separate property is property enjoyable by the wife, exclusive of her husband. But what is the meaning of separate enjoyment by a deceased wife? What is the meaning of separate enjoyment of property that can neither be reduced into immediate possession, nor irrevocably charged, so as to enjoy its fruits or equivalent?

We must say that it does appear to us that there is a very palpable and substantial distinction between the power of a person sui juris, and of a married woman, to appoint generally by will. In the one case there is capacity to contract debt, and to make the estate subject to the power his own for all purposes; in the other, there is no personal capacity to contract debt, nor any power to make the estate strictly separate estate, in which character alone it could be seized, not for that which has no existence—the debt of the married woman—but as that which she has impliedly contracted to charge. We shall await with much interest the decision in the case to which we allude, and which we shall take care shall be reported at the earliest possible period for our readers.

COUNTY COURTS AND THEIR JUDGES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The perusal of the able article in your last number, on the evils and abuses of the county courts, has induced me to add my contribution to the communications already made to you. Should you not deem it worthy of insertion, it may yet furnish some hints for any future notices of the same subject, as it is from comparing the individual experience of practitioners that you will be enabled to form comprehensive ideas upon the subject.

It is the deficiency of character in the county courts, and the knowledge that the decisions of the judges cannot in all cases be relied upon as just or impartial, or in accordance with the rules of law and evidence, which have led to the prejudice so generally existing against them in the minds of professional men.

The following case requires no comment:—At the instance of a client I instituted proceedings in one of the metropolitan county courts for the recovery of the sum of 19*l.* 19*s.* due to the plaintiff for rent. The original claim was more than 20*l.*, but the jurisdiction was not at that time extended to sums above that amount. The fees paid before the hearing was obtained amounted to nearly 5*l.* The defendant pleaded poverty as an excuse for non-payment, and the merciful (it cannot, I fear, be added just) judge ordered payment of debt and costs by monthly instalments of 10*s.* The unfortunate plaintiff had therefore to wait nearly a year for the payment of court fees only; and even these he never obtained, for the defendant paid but three instalments. Execution was then issued, the goods seized were claimed by a third party, and an interpleader was the result. Although I was successful in proving that a portion of the goods seized belonged to the defendant in the action, yet the judge, after considering the case for a fortnight, ordered my unfortunate client to pay the costs. To complete the history, the amount arising from the sale of the goods, to which he was held entitled, was swallowed up by the expenses of the sale, the sale being made by the officers of the court. Not a farthing has since been paid, or will ever be obtained; and thus the successful suitor in the "poor man's court" has been a considerable loser through having rights which he sought to enforce in the tribunal intended for small demands.

Can it be expected, that, with the experience of cases of this kind, any attorney will advise a client to resort to county courts, when the superior courts are within his reach?

Your obedient servant,

J.A.

Dec. 21, 1853.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE JURIST."

SIR,—The evils arising from the localisation of judges, as pointed out in your last number, did not escape our ancestors. The stat. 33 Hen. 8, c. 24, recites, that in the reign of Richard II an act was passed, "that no man learned in the laws of this realm should from thenceforth be justice of assize in the county where he dwelleth;" and that, "since the making of which good act and law, divers justices, by their own means, industry, and policy, and for their own commodity and ease, have obtained, contrary to the form of the said act, to be justices of assize in the counties where they were born or were inhabiting, whereby some jealousy of their affection and favour towards their kinsmen, alliance, and friends within the said counties hath been conceived and had against them by the King's most loving subjects of the same counties." It is then enacted, that no man shall be justice of size in the county where he was born, or doth inhabit, under a penalty of 100*l*.

I am, Sir,
Your constant reader,
H.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

We continue our extracts from Mr. Coode's papers:—

To the second paper are appended—1. Suggestions as to the preparation of compilations of the existing law, to accompany bills in Parliament, (prepared in 1842). 2. A digest of the acts for the relief of the poor.

The following extract is from the first appendix:—

"The advantage of doing all these acts of legislation deliberately and with ample knowledge cannot be disputed; that it is habitually so done will hardly be maintained; at all events, the foregoing examples, in a matter in which it was least likely that neglect and ignorance would be apparent, serve to shew how frequently it is not done. But it may still be said that the means of obtaining all the requisite information already exist. They do so, but they are not at hand in an available shape. The matter, so far as statute law is concerned, is in the statute-book; but who does—indeed, who can, upon a sudden doubt arising, or in the course of debate, or in the moment for deciding—seek it out? Who, for instance, would, without some indication, seek all the original authorities for an enactment so simple, in effect, as this?—

But when the matter is so compiled, who can have any excuse for not referring to the original matter when any case of doubt, however slight, arises?" (Pp. 60, 61).

Our next extract will contain the greater part of the third paper on "Consolidation." After describing the important functions of the statesman in the process of consolidation, Mr. Coode proceeds:—

"(100). This element of practical policy and statesmanship, necessarily and inevitably involved in the process of consolidation, is one that can be submitted to no rule more precise or minute than the general principle of adopting on every occasion what may appear to be on that occasion the most useful practicable course; in other words, the field of operation is all human affairs in all circumstances—the means of operation, all human intelligence and power—and the object, the utmost attainable utility. These manifestly transcend all rules and all methods that can be laid down at any time by anticipation.

"(101). But when the practical determination is in any case come to by any means whatever, the matter concluded comes again within the operation of the rules for expressing laws, (91), and for preserving the relative connexion and order of their elements, (50—59). Here the statesman's special function is at an end—the simple principles of method and composition have undisputed and undivided control; the function of the formal compiler revives; and here it would appear, that, in addition to many rules of smaller importance, there is one expedient of great importance for the realisation in the most complete and simple manner of this process of consolidation.

"Consolidation consists mainly in the replacement, in an improved expression, form, and order, in one synchronous enactment, of an indefinite series of distinct pre-existing laws.

"As it comes into effect, the pre-existing laws which it replaces cease to have effect. The instantaneous and identical operation is, that as the one comes into force the others are defunct; and it would be to lose the chief benefit of consolidation to leave any part of the previous law on the same subject still in operation. In other words, consolidation of the law should imply an equivalent repeal of law.

"(102). It is desirable to disincumber any consolidation of the law of all matter that is foreign or unnecessary to it; and the repealing clause, which would generally be very cumbrous in connexion with any comprehensive consolidation, (in the case of the poor laws, would extend to above 300 articles, some requiring a minute and detailed expression), would be a serious incumbrance if inserted in any act.

"A good practice has been adopted, in many cases, of enacting the repeals in acts separately and distinctly from the consolidated or new enactments, as in the case of the acts 3 Geo. 4, c. 41, and the four following chapters, 42, 43, 44, 45; and of the 5 Geo. 4, c. 95, and the two following chapters, 96 and 97; and of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 105, and the eleven following chapters; and of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, and the four following chapters; and of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 53, and the three following chapters; and of the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 36, and the following chapter; and of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 71, and the — following chapters; and in other instances that it would be unnecessarily tedious to enumerate. The advantage of this course is, that the repealing act and repealed acts all sleep together, and need never again incumber the library, the law, or legislation.

"This practice should be invariably adopted, not only in formal consolidations, but on every occasion when any portion of the statute law, however minute, is formally repealed, or in effect superseded. This practice alone, consistently carried out, during the last thirty years would have relieved the statute-book of three-fourths of its contents, and would have made the task of consolidation easy now to perform, or easily to be dispensed with.

"(103). Somewhat similar considerations apply to another very cumbrous and very detailed branch of legislation, which has hitherto exercised, through the way in which it has been dealt with, a very injurious effect upon the expression, form, and bulk of the permanent and most important part of our legislation; that is, the incorporation in one series of provisions of transitory matters with permanent.

"The whole business of legislation is to effect the changes in the law which the progress of society and increasing complication of interests require. No legislation can be supposed to be so perfect at the time of its promulgation as never again to require change; and all legislation, as it effects a change, implies the probability of a future change.

"Still the greater part of legislation has for its object the arrival at a settled and more or less stable and permanent condition of the rights and obligations of all the members of the community; and, effectually, a large and important portion of English legislation has been permanent through centuries; and all legislation whatsoever intended to establish rights, (57—59), or to impose and define obligations, (60), the only material and substantive part of the law, is in its conception, and when successful, is in its effect, of this permanent character. And it is precisely this portion of all law that determines the general and special character of every legal system, and is productive of those political and social results which are the ultimate objects of all legislation, and the consummation of all political success. It is only this portion which it much concerns us to make clear to the conceptions of all men, inasmuch as all subjects are equally interested in it; and it is this portion which, when once approved in practice, it most concerns us to make permanent. In short, nothing can justify the withholding of any labour which can be usefully bestowed upon it.

"(104). All other matters, modes of protection, remedies, procedures, administrative and executive arrangements—even the greatest constitutional and political institutions—are but subservient and ministerial to the establishment and maintenance of individual rights. These instrumental institutions suffer, without legislation, incessant change, and are the constant subjects of express legislative modification. No doubt they have a stability generally proportionate to their usefulness in subordination to their prime object, and while they subsist, good expression, good form, and certainty of effect in them is also useful in proportion to their duration.

"(105). But these instrumental institutions are, for our present purpose, of two kinds; the one set subservient to the permanent rights of the community, and which themselves, in their intention and expression, are always of a permanent nature.

"These, so far as they are specially connected with any primary subject of consolidation, should be consolidated with it in one operation, and would become subject to amendments with the whole of the consolidated act, of which indeed they would be, in the ordinary course of things, the only part subject to much or frequent amendment.

"(106). But the second set of instrumental provisions—those, namely, which, in their conception and original institution, have a temporary and transitory character, and are adopted only as a means of transition from one state of things to another, and, by the terms of their institution, become defunct as soon as the transformation is effected—require a wholly different treatment.

"When the object is to effect such transformation—say, for instance, to inclose a waste, to convert common into severalty, to convert tithe into rent, and commute it for a rent-charge, to settle boundaries, or the like—the result, when effected, is a permanent result, calculated to endure, perhaps, for all time; but the law which will then apply to this result will be found in the general permanent law of several property, of rent, of rent-charge, or boundary, or whatever the transformed subject may be; and a few sentences will in every case express all that is necessary to identify the subject thus transformed, with all its congenic matter, and to confer on all its qualities, incidents, and consequences; and this expression is all that should appear in any consolidated or any permanent law.

"All the instrumental provisions, the appointment of commissions, their investiture with powers, the definition of their mode of proceeding, their protections, and their responsibilities, are transient accessories, doomed to disappearance and extinguishment as soon as their temporary work is done.

"It is impossible to produce cumbrousness and complication of form, and concealment of essential matter, more effectually than by the present mode of legislation in all such cases. In the instances above adverted to, the register prepared according to the paper I. (...) shews, that in the acts passed for effecting the commutation of tithes, the enfranchisement of copyholds, the inclosure of waste, and severance of commons, about one clause in forty-three contains a permanent element, and that even in this one clause it is commonly but a part intermingled with a greater portion of transitory matter. I have not examined all these clauses with sufficient minuteness to assert the proportion very precisely, but am satisfied that the total permanent matter in the whole of this great mass of enactments does not constitute nearly a one-hundredth part of the whole. Thus, by this present mode of providing, in one undistinguishable set of enactments, both the permanent result and the transient process by which it is to be obtained, we, and all generations of men, have to wade through ninety-nine parts of expired and inoperative verbiage for one part of living law.

"Yet in no one instance that I have ever observed has it occurred that the clearness of expression or the practical effect were improved by this intermingling of transitory and permanent matter; on the contrary, in every experiment that I have made, the permanent matter, when separated from the transitory, has come out in a vastly improved form—simpler, clearer, more rational, and more emphatic.

LONDON, DECEMBER 31, 1853.

MR. WILLIAMS*, in his recently published work on the practice of the Court of Chancery, which we shall take an early opportunity of noticing at more length, in discussing the effect of the 61st section of stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, observes, most correctly, that it is not to be inferred from that section that the Court will send no question to be tried at law; and that the section refers only to those cases where the question is a mere question of law, not to a mixed question of law and fact. He then proceeds to discuss the effect of the 62nd section, by which the Court may determine the legal title of the party seeking equitable relief, without requiring the parties to proceed at law. On this Mr. Williams says—

"With reference to the provisions of the 62nd section, in cases of patent, copyright, or the like, the Court generally refused to interfere by injunction until the plaintiff's title had been established at law. This became so invariably the course of the Court upon all applications for an injunction, that Lord Cottenham once suggested the prudence of commencing the proceedings in all cases by an action in the court of law before the bill in equity was put upon the file. The Court may now itself determine the legal title for the purpose of the equitable relief sought. Under the former practice the Court would always send the question to law, if the case, from its difficulty or importance, was such as to require it. The case of The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company v. The Great Northern Railway Company (9 Hare, 284) was a case of that kind. There a railway company having acquired a legal right to and possession of land, and constructed their railway over the same, under the provisions of their act, another railway company, to whom the Legislature had given power to purchase the same land for the purpose of their undertaking, was restrained by injunction from exercising such power, pending the trial of the legal question of the effect of such conflicting powers.

"The Vice-Chancellor Turner, before whom the question arose, in giving judgment on the motion for the injunction, made these observations:—"It has hardly been denied, in the argument of this case, that where a railway company is about to take lands not authorised to be taken under the summary powers given to them by the Legislature, the case is a proper one for the interference of this Court by injunction. It has been said, however, that the injunction asked for by this motion ought not to be granted, on several grounds. As to the first point, that the plaintiffs have taken their powers subject to the previously-acquired right of the defendants, the question is purely legal. It is a question of great importance to the parties, and not free from difficulty; the question, too, is drawn into equity only by the necessity of interference to preserve the legal right; and it is a case on which I do not hesitate to desire the opinion of a Court of law, more especially as what has happened here may have happened in other cases. The rights of other parties may be affected by the decision, and the case appears to involve a general question of law of no little consequence, viz. what is the effect of two acts of Parliament relating to a special subject, and conferring the same right on different parties?' The last observation of the learned judge referred to a provision in the respective companies' acts, conferring on the two different companies the right of purchasing, according to the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, the same identical plot of ground.

"In the case of Falkner v. Grace (9 Hare, 280) some useful observations were made by the Vice-Chancellor Turner with reference to the class of questions on which it would have been proper for the Court of Chancery, under the old practice, to send cases for the opinion of Courts of common law, or to seek the assistance of the judge of such courts, by virtue of stats. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 14, and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83, s. 8, or otherwise; and the same rules would probably, in some measure, guide the discretion of the Court as to the course to be taken in such cases under the present practice. In the case above referred to, his Honor said—'This does not appear to me to be a case which this Court should send for the opinion of a Court of law. In my opinion it is desirable for this Court to avoid, as far as possible, sending cases for the opinion of another Court. I think the aid of a Court of law, or the assistance of the judges of that Court, may be properly resorted to in cases where the question is one of importance to the general law of the country, or where the decision may have an extensive operation in a public point of view; but my opinion is, that this Court ought not to require the assistance of another Court on questions which turn merely on the construction of particular instruments.' The practice is now, since the late act, in cases of difficulty and importance, for the Court of equity to avail itself of the assistance of one of the common-law judges, instead of sending the question for the decision of a Court of common law." (Pp. 290 et seq.)

The learned author, in the foregoing passage, states very correctly what is the practice authorised by the act, and what, in our humble opinion, it would be very convenient to find the practice adopted actually by the Court of Chancery; but hitherto we do not think the Court has very willingly or liberally acted upon the powers given to it in that respect by the Legislature. Many cases have been before the different branches of the Court of Chancery, which, if the power is ever to be exercised, were cases for the exercise of it. We do not mean, of course, that it was, or ever is, under the act, compulsory on the equity judge to decide the question of law; but that the cases, at the argument of many of which we have been present, were cases in which it would have been quite within the power of the Court, and greatly to the convenience and saving of pocket of the suitor, to pronounce at once an opinion on the legal question. In one case, of which we have personal knowledge, the whole question was, whether a particular combination of known manufacturing processes, was the subject of a patent. The case came before the Court, as such cases usually do, on a motion for an injunction. All the facts were admitted. The plaintiff admitted that his patent rested on the special combination, used in the particular way described, and had no other foundation. The defendant admitted that he had made use of that particular combination in that particular way; so that there really was nothing in dispute except the dry legal question, was that particular combination of old things, used in that particular way, an invention within the meaning of the patent laws? Nevertheless the judge, though pressed to decide, and though by no means an habitually timid judge, refused to do more than follow Lord

Cottenham's practice, of letting the plaintiff try his right at law.

It is true, there are some difficulties attending any general use of the 62nd section of the Chancery Procedure Act, which the Legislature, more suo, appear not to have thought of. The act, no doubt, was intended to apply to just the sort of case we have alluded to, viz. cases where, on a motion for interlocutory relief, the giving or withholding that relief depends on the legal right. Then the act says the Court may determine the legal title; so that, if the Court acts under the section at all, it determines; and its decision would be binding, unless overturned by a higher authority. Now, every one knows, that even on a mere matter of law, cases are not prepared, nor presented to the Court, nor argued on motions for injunctions, and the like, as they are at the trial of a cause; and hence judges are very unwilling to make a binding determination of legal right, in a proceeding wanting the solemnity and deliberation of the hearing of a cause. Thus the judges are between two difficulties. They must either abandon the 62nd section of the statute practically, because they can never use it except when they scarcely deem it prudent or just to use it; or they must run the risk of making binding declarations of title, in proceedings not originally framed, and not habitually conducted, with such an end in view. A remedy for this, it is not very difficult to imagine; but it is not either our present business, or consistent with our present inclination, to suggest any.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

We continue our extracts from Mr. Coode's papers:—

"(107). The result is, that all transitory matter should be kept asunder from all permanent, and each enacted in separate acts, which would thus, as regards the transitory provisions, be published and republished only so long as the transitory operation continued. This would clear a consolidated law:—

"1. Of all retro-active enactments:

Repeals; Nullifications; Confirmations;
Ratifications.

"2. Of all occasional enactments—that is, of such wherein the force of the law is spent on one defined occasion:

Protections for life or other periods of vested interests affected by permanent changes;
Compensations to individuals for life or lives for meritorious services;
Instrumental acts providing the temporary machinery for any permanent result.

"3. Of continuance clauses and suspension clauses.

"This simple, and, but for its constant neglect, seemingly obvious plan, of separating transitory from permanent matter, would certainly reduce the amount of statutory matter to be permanently consolidated to very much less than one-tenth of the statute law in force at any one time, and would greatly improve the form of both. Indeed, the transitory, especially the instrumental part of our law, is susceptible of great and systematic improvement, which it would probably receive very rapidly, if it were, in the way proposed, kept separate, and thus became the subject of a more definite and distinct consideration, and of a more perfect division of labour. However, whether improved or not, it is a matter, cumbrous and troublesome as it is, of the utmost insignificance, in comparison with the small but substantial and invaluable matter of our permanent law.

"(108). It is scarcely within the scope of these pers or of our commission to consider in great detail the subject of transitory instrumental provisions; but a remark is important. It is, that these being required very frequently, in almost identical terms, for particular occasions, they appear incessantly repeated in the statute-book. In this they are unlike the general permanent law, with which this commission has to deal, which rarely, if ever, affords a just occasion for two enactments in the same terms. It results from this fact, that this transitory instrumental law, especially as regards private acts, is very conveniently dealt with by means of such forms as those known as 'the Consolidated Clauses Acts,' and are capable of great practical and formal improvement in that way, and of great benefit, by the extension of jurisprudential and judicial results to all the many similar cases connected by means of one and the same identical form.

"(109). Leaving, however, these transitory matters aside, to participate, it may be, in the benefit of any improvement to be effected in the expression and form and operation of the permanent law, and confining our expressions henceforth to the latter, it is to be observed, that all the principles of arrangement and expression propounded in relation to the digestion of the law (48—93) will apply to the original expression of that which it may be determined to consolidate, and that when the requisite selection of matter to be consolidated has been made by the use of that more practical and political judgment required for its safe performance, (98, 99), the ministerial duty of arranging and expressing the matter falls again upon the compiler, and he who has prepared the digest from the old law will equally well or equally ill prepare a consolidation from that digest, and from his practical instructions. As to so much of the old law as is to be retained and re-enacted unchanged, its expression in the digest will be its expression in the consolidated law, and it will only be the new matter which will involve a new labour to the draftsman.

"(110). As no consolidation will ever be final while men's circumstances change—as it is most important, even for the retention of what is best, to facilitate its adaptation to the change of views of those who are to use it—and as the best is subjected to danger by indissoluble connexion with what is bad—it is most desirable, in every point of view, that consolidation should be so effected as to be most easily susceptible of every change which the Legislature may from time to time desire to effect; that it should not be an obstacle, as solemn codes have often been, to the infusion of better principles or more convenient practices; but that, on the contrary, it should, if possible, be made a positive facilitation to every act of subsequent legislation.

"Nothing would more facilitate the minutest amendments of a law than its original expression in the minutest possible articles; for a minute change would disturb but a minute article, not dislocate a system; a larger change would be more likely to correspond definitely with a definite number of such articles, and their amendment or excision would take place with a certainty and accuracy of effect in proportion to their original logical minuteness of subdivision.

"It is scarcely a less recommendation of a minute division of the law by articles, that it would compulse the draftsman into both condensed and lucid expression; and, as quicquid melius spectatur in minimis, the difficulty of reading and understanding the law, even by the learned, but most of all by the unlearned, would in a connected order be reduced nearly in the proportion of the succinctness of the individual articles.

"(111). It is not forgotten, that the present mode of passing bills in Parliament is unfavourable to this suggestion, if the numbered articles are to be passed into law as if they were distinct clauses; but even supposing that they must be so passed, and that the form would cause an increase of trouble and delay in the passing of the law, the objection would scarcely be admissible, inasmuch as the law is not to be accommodated to Parliament—the instrument of its preparation, but Parliament to the law, for the sake of which it alone exists. But it is submitted that the objection does not exist, or is easily removable; for nothing would be easier than to treat as one clause any number of articles connected by one common consideration and heading, as a section, chapter, or otherwise. The mode of subdividing acts of Parliament, recommended some years since by Mr. Symonds, and since frequently adopted in consolidated and other acts, forms a perfect precedent for general practice in this respect.

"(112). But although it is very useful thus to subdivide an act into minute articles, it is on the other hand most pernicious to subdivide and disperse the parts of one subject in different acts. Nothing contributes so effectually to the due composition of all its parts, as the presence to the mind of the legislator and the draftsman of the whole of the connected matter. Nothing conduces in an equal degree to simplicity and clearness and compactness as the consideration and expression at the same time of all that is substantially, incidentally, or logically connected. No one thing—perhaps not all influences together—has produced so much confusion in the law as the practice of scattered legislation, of references, adoptions, and their consequences, citations, preambles, non obstante clauses, and the like incumbrances.

"It is of the first importance to simple, clear, and effective consolidation, that all that is incidental to any one subject be included in one act. In the general and permanent law no just occasion exists for two identical provisions; no just occasion for an adoption by reference; no admissible use of such forms as 'the Consolidated Clauses Acts,' applicable to transitory and private and local legislation. The rule for effectual consolidation is to disregard any temptation to shorten any act by the device of reference or adoption—to include in each act frankly all that is logically part of its subject; in short, in each act to include one subject, the whole of that subject, and nothing but that subject.

"(113). Because of the necessity for a practical determination of the matter to be consolidated, in which a discretion must be used beyond that of the mere compiler or draftsman, I have, being unassisted by the requisite instructions, abstained from preparing an appendix to this paper, to exhibit the effect of consolidation upon the vast mass of incongruous matter contained in the digest of the poor law appended to Paper II. Such a consolidation, framed by myself, without official authority, would be an unauthorised and almost impertinent suggestion of great changes, which, if to be propounded at all, it is incumbent upon those to propound who are most responsible for the administration and sustained efficiency of that law.

"But I may, perhaps, be permitted to say, after many years' experience and practice in analogous operations, that I am confident that the most efficient consolidation of that mass of law would not exceed in quantity of matter one-twentieth part of the mass of the digest of poor laws, and that it would incomparably surpass that matter in clearness and completeness of expression.

"(114). Nor is it by any means necessary that subjects so comprehensive, and involving so considerable an exertion of practical and political discretion, should be chosen for the subjects of consolidation: not only does a comprehensive subject involve a larger amount of labour and a greater exertion of ability in its digestion, but it necessarily includes more subjects which will give occasion to parliamentary and other discussion, and so in both ways retard the progress of the process.

"It is no doubt greatly conducive to logical consitency to take into view, and subject to one treatment, the largest possible aggregate of analogous or connected subjects; but logical consistency, however desirable, is not a prime object of legislation, and is obtained too dearly when practical, specific, individual adaptation of the law to the circumstances—when particular fitness—is sacrificed to formal simplicity. It is neither desirable, nor, if it were desirable, would men be prepared to submit to it, that the law should be systematised by any artificial or logical process, or by any other than that natural organic process by which men discover, apply, and assimilate the legal provisions most fit for each case, in which process they are incessantly developing the application of every useful rule to all the variety of cases to which it may be practically applicable. It is this inductive development of practical good sense, always, consciously or unconsciously, consistent with real practical logic, and the only true method available, consistently with a due regard to all material interests, that generates and develops, by a process more sure and true than any speculative logic, the greatest amount and unity of system of which this multiform and versatile subject-matter is susceptible. It is to this natural growth and development of the law that the consolidator is to afford his services; he is not to cramp the growth of practical intelligence by his formal and systematic preconceptions; he is to afford on every occasion his assistance in bringing together, in the simplest form and the simplest possible expression, whatever relates to a given subject in hand, and to apply to it whatever practical processes the Legislature may determine.

"And it matters not at all how small, how limited, these subjects may be. The elements, whatever they be, with which legislation can deal, have, as shewn in the previous paper, a certain indissoluble relation to each other, and one order alone in which they can be logically treated, and this method is as applicable to the smallest fragment of the law, to a single phrase in legislation, as to the entire body of the law. Every separate fragment would have to be treated in the same way; and when any number of fragments, connected by their subject-matter, have been so consolidated at different times and by different hands, their simple re-enactment under one head would be a consolidation of the whole.

"It results that consolidation can be most easily effected, and proceed with most rapid effect, and with the most certain prospect of eventual assimilation and consistency, if it be undertaken in the smallest possible parts.

"And in order not to incur danger of disturbing portions of the law already sufficiently accessible and intelligible, it might be well to make a commencement chiefly on those subjects which, by their acknowledged unsatisfactory state, they most require a systematic and ameliorative treatment. All that is necessary is for those who are engaged in the process to have a common understanding of the nature and practical application of the process.

"(115). Still the work of consolidation would not be done in any case, unless the subject taken in hand were sufficiently distinct and complete of itself, had sufficient unity of character to allow of its being treated as a whole, to allow of the coterminous repeal of the statute law previously occupying the ground which the consolidated law is to occupy, and to dispense absolutely with all citation and reference to other statutory matter. Unless this be done, the multiplicity, cumbrousness, intricacy, and confusion now justly complained of, and which it is the object of consolidation to remove, will only be commenced afresh and perpetuated.

"(116). It is hoped that the preceding remarks will have removed some objections which have been expressed as to the danger to the consistency and operation of the existing law, which, as is feared, would be involved in the effects of consolidation.

"The first danger apprehended, that of interfering by surprise or mischance with the common law, may be wholly avoided by the instruction to the digester (see Appendix to Paper 2) to adhere to the very terms of the statute law to be consolidated. If this rule be observed, any disparity between the terms of the digest and those of the consolidating act would always display any encroachments or contractions in the latter, and indicate the extent to which the field of the common law is invaded or enlarged by its operation.

"Indeed, the more probable operation of the process of consolidation would, inasmuch as it would chiefly tend to remove a vast mass of anomalous, heterogeneous encroachments of the statute law made in various times on the common law, and still, by their position in the statute book, blockading and preventing the development of the common law—the operation would, I say, tend rather to enlarge and disencumber the field of the common law than to encroach upon it.

"(117). But another objection felt is, that by consolidation we might lose the advantage of those beneficial interpretations and applications which the Courts of law have put from time to time on the existing statute law.

"It is wholly a matter of choice, which may be adopted or rejected, whether a consolidation shall operate so or not. If the Legislature please to retain the exact combined effect of an old statute, and its existing interpretations, there is nothing more to be done than to re-enact the operative parts in ipsisimis verbis of the old statute, and all the interpretation which has hitherto been made or would in the course of time have been made on the old statute will, ipso facto, as to the past interpretation, apply to those words in the re-enactment, and the prospective interpretation, by all analogy, upon the same data, would itself be the same.

"(118). It is true, however, that a large quantity of judicial decision upon the statutes, made merely to remove the conflict of parts, would become useless, and very beneficially become useless, so soon as those conflicting parts by consolidation were made consistent.

"And all that mass of construction which has turned upon the question, whether and how far a later enactment controls, enlarges, limits, or supersedes an earlier one, would also undoubtedly become useless so soon as the existing effect of the later and the earlier were brought into synchronous operation in one act.

"And so of all those constructions as to the question, whether two or more enactments be co-ordinate, or one subordinate to another, which would become useless and inoperative so soon as the relation of generality or speciality was shewn by the places occupied by the respective provisions in one consolidated enactment.

"As to all this mass of judicial construction, it is not law, it is one almost unmitigated evil, only rendered necessary and endurable by the fear of one still greater. It is but the cobbling of statutory provisions not originally made to fit their subject-matter, and not made so as to hold together, and few happier results would flow from consolidation than such a consistent reformation of any part of the law as would at once abolish all the constructions that have ever been applied to it, and all future construction other than the plain reading of consistent terms. This is a result too perfect to be hoped for, but an approach to it in any degree is not to be held forth as a subject of alarm to us."

We give the whole of the fourth paper, "On subsequent Legislation, with a View to preserve the Order and Consistency of the Law after Consolidation." Sect. 123 contains a suggestion of great practical importance, which may be acted upon even if the scheme of a general consolidation of the statute law is abandoned.

IV.—ON SUBSEQUENT LEGISLATION, WITH A VIEW TO PRESERVE THE ORDER AND CONSISTENCY OF THE LAW AFTER CONSOLIDATION.

"(119). Consolidation would be a serious evil if its operation were to diminish in any degree the plastic quality of the law under the hand of the Legislature. Permanency of institution is desirable only in proportion as the institution is in use found beneficial. It is an effect to be secured, not by impediment or obstruction, but by the approval and the free choice of the community. Consolidation is not desirable in the state of English society to give stability to the law. It is desirable as a stage in amendment, and as a facilitation of all future amendment. The present cumbersome and confused state of the law is the greatest impediment to amendment, and if permanency alone were the thing desired, it could by no means be more certainly secured than by keeping the law in its present state of intractable disorder.

"Doubtless, by consolidation is meant a considerable step in itself in the way of improvement, of improved form, of improved expression, and of improved operation; but it would be the height of presumption to suppose that we are entitled at this time to invest the law with fixed form, or that we are capable of achieving it; and, however good the form in which we could now mould it, that form would be too dearly purchased by the surrender of the present unlimited liberty of change. Power to move, though in confusion, is preferable to a cataleptic stability in the most admired position.

"It is true that there have been and are still many communities in such a political or social state as to derive great benefit from a fixed form of law, and the more in the proportion to its unalterable character. In a state of barbarism or anarchy, where the people are incapable of intelligent legislation, an immutable and simple code has often proved a means of elevation and civilisation to the community. In a despotism it is a great protection to have a law 'that changes not' at the caprice of a despot, and may serve as some barrier to his excesses; but amongst free, intelligent, civilising men the law that does not keep progress with their intelligence, and bear accommodation to their changing wants, is, in proportion to its rigidity, a tyranny.

"Consolidation of the law of England, then, is inadmissible but on conditions consistent with the utmost liberty of alteration.

"(120). It is assumed in the following observations that consolidation of the law is to be attempted; and the purpose of these remarks is to consider how we may retain with certainty the whole of the benefit involved in consolidation, and still at the same time realise the utmost liberty, latitude, and facility of amendment at the changing pleasure of the Legislature.

"For there is an equal necessity of considering the subject in both these points of view. When once a body of law is well constructed, there is a reluctance to disturb it; to introduce confusion into its order, and involvement into its expression. On the other hand, there is a still stronger tendency, as is shewn in the history of all our partial consolidations, to dissoluate the law by amendments, and to create anew the confusion and disorder to escape from which was the object of the consolidation.

"(121). The course which will be here recommended is one which has a more general application, applying with as much effect to all amendments of the law at all times as to those which are to be undertaken after consolidation. It is simply this:—

"1. NEVER TO AMEND THE LAW BY DISTINCT AND ISOLATED AMENDMENTS,—

"—BUT ALWAYS TO RE-ENACT WHATEVER LAW IS TO BE AMENDED WITH THE AMENDMENTS INCLUDED IN THEIR PROPER PLACE IN THAT LAW.

"II. IN EVERY SUCH CASE OF RE-ENACTMENT, TO REPEAL BY EXPLICIT REFERENCE SO MUCH OF THE PREVIOUS LAW AS IS THUS RE-ENACTED (101, 102).

"III. TO KEEP IN DISTINCT CLAUSES (103-107).

—'THE PERMANENT MATTER,'

—'THE TRANSITORY MATTER,' AND

—'THE REPEALS,'

—'AND AT THE LAST STAGE OF THE BILL PRECEDING THE ROYAL ASSENT TO DIVIDE THE BILL, IF IT CONTAIN MORE THAN ONE OF THESE KINDS OF MATTER, INTO AS MANY PARTS, TO BE PASSED AS SO MANY DISTINCT ACTS.

"(122). It is by distinct amendments, insulated from previous amendments and from the original law, that we have arrived at the present confusion. It is manifest, that if the first rule here recommended had been always observed, we could never have had two statutes in force at one time upon the same matter.

"It is almost equally certain, that if every amendment were required to be interpolated into and assimilated with the matter it affects to amend, both must be made to have at least an apparent congruity. Incompatibility within the limits of the bill would be too striking to pass unchallenged, and correct legal composition, as to order and matter, and agreement of expression, would be to a great extent secured.

"It may be objected,—that this re-enactment of the old and settled law would expose it more frequently than now to discussion and unsettlement. To this it is answered, that any immunity of the law from unsettlement which depends upon its being protected from discussion is immunity held by concealment, and that a law which will not bear discussion is scarcely entitled to be secure from change. But the assumption itself is false, that the original law would be placed in jeopardy the more by being reproduced on every occasion of amendment, for it is incomparably more easy to effect changes intentional and unintentional under the name of amendments in a law which is not produced than in one that is fully displayed. It is submitted, that amendments, which under such a rule must manifestly appear to be consistent with the law, would rather tend to establish and confirm what is useful in the law than to unsettle it.

"The second rule,—that all the law thus amended should be explicitly repealed,—tends the same way, to concentrate the responsibility for the amendment, by making the real extent of the operation manifest; but it has the further effect sought by all attempts at consolidation, of preventing the accumulation of incongruous laws of different ages.

"An immediate effect of the observance of these two rules would be to get rid also of recitals, and references to co-existent laws.

"The purpose and effect of the third rule has been described in the preceding paper, (103-107). It would keep the permanent substantive matter unincumbered by transitory and effete matter so long as it remained in operation. The transitory matter, in an act by itself, would expire when its temporary purpose was effected, and would disappear from the statute book. The repealing act, like the laws it repealed, would no more obtrude itself upon attention.

(To be continued).

Sir John Jervis, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, has appointed John Brown Twist, of Coventry, Gent., to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Warwick.

REGULÆ GENERALES.

Orders for regulating Proceedings by and before the Judges of County Courts, under the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, and for fixing and determining the Fees to be taken in respect of such Proceedings, made by the Right Hon. ROBERT MONSEY BARON CRANWORTH, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain:—

I. The clerk of every county court shall keep a book, in the form in the schedule hereunto annexed, to be called "The Charitable Trusts Book" in which, a record shall be kept of all proceedings taken in that court in matters of charitable trusts.

II. When any person has obtained the required order or certificate from the Charity Commissioners, and he is desirous of taking proceedings in the county court, he shall produce such order or certificate to the clerk, who shall retain and file the same in numerical order in his office; and the party producing such order or certificate shall be deemed the plaintiff in such proceedings, and the person served with a summons under Order IV shall be deemed the defendant.

III. When the Attorney-General shall propose to take proceedings in the county court, he shall cause to be delivered or transmitted to the clerk a written statement, shewing the nature and object of the proposed proceedings, and the clerk shall retain and file such statement in numerical order in his office; and the Attorney-General shall in such proceedings be deemed the plaintiff, and the person served with a summons under Order IV shall be deemed the defendant.

IV. Upon the production of any order, certificate, or statement hereinbefore mentioned, the clerk shall, at the instance of the plaintiff, prepare a summons thereon, in the form set forth in the schedule hereunto annexed, in which shall be stated the substance of the order, certificate, or statement, and he shall make as many copies thereof as there are parties required by the plaintiff to be summoned, and two additional copies, the one to be filed in the clerk's office, and the other to be transmitted to the Charity Commissioners.

V. The clerk, if required by the plaintiff, shall prepare a notice to attend proceedings, in the form set forth in the said schedule, to be served on any persons indicated by the plaintiff, besides those summoned under the last preceding Order, and the said clerk shall make as many copies thereof as there are persons to whom such notice is to be given, and two additional copies, one to be filed in his office, and the other to be transmitted to the Charity Commissioners.

VI. The clerk shall forthwith transmit, by prepaid post letter, a copy of the summons to each of the parties required to appear, and a copy of the notice to attend proceedings to each of the persons indicated by the plaintiff, and such transmission shall be sufficient service, unless the judge shall otherwise direct.

VII. Where the plaintiff does not require any summons or notice to attend proceedings to be issued, the clerk shall prepare a notice of hearing, in the form set forth in the said schedule, and two additional copies thereof, one to be filed in his office, and the other to be transmitted to the Charity Commissioners, and shall either deliver such notice to the plaintiff, or cause it to be served on him by prepaid post letter, unless the judge shall otherwise direct.

VIII. In all cases it shall be competent for the clerk, if required by the plaintiff, to summon some persons, and to serve others with either or both of the said notices, or to serve a notice of hearing on the plaintiff, and a notice to attend proceedings on any other person.

IX. In all cases it shall be competent for the judge to direct what persons, or additional persons, shall be served with a summons or notice to attend proceedings or notice of hearing.

X. Upon the requisition of the Charity Commissioners, a copy of the judge's note of the evidence taken at the hearing, or such part thereof as may be required by the commissioners, shall be transmitted by the judge to them at their office by post or otherwise.

XI. Upon the requisition of the Attorney-General, in proceedings instituted by him, a copy of the judge's note of the evidence taken at the hearing, or such part thereof as may be required by the Attorney-General, shall be transmitted to him by post or otherwise.

XII. A copy of the summons, notice to attend proceedings, notice to appear, together with a copy of the order made by the Court, shall in all cases be transmitted by the clerk, forthwith after the hearing, by post or otherwise, as the judge shall direct, to the office of the commissioners.

XIII. Where the annual income of the charity exceeds 10*l.* the court fees shall be payable as in cases within the ordinary jurisdiction of the Court, without prejudice to the privilege of the Attorney-General as to costs, and the charitable funds may be made liable to the payment thereof, at the discretion of the judge.

XIV. Where the annual income of the charity does not exceed the sum of 10*l.* no fees of court shall be payable out of the funds of the charity; nor shall any fees be paid by any party to the proceeding, unless the judge shall, in his discretion, order any of the parties to the proceeding before him to pay such fees of court as he shall think fit, without prejudice to the privilege of the Attorney-General as to costs.

XV. Where court fees are payable, they shall be calculated according to the scale of fees applicable to proceedings for the recovery of tenements under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 122, the annual income of the charity, like the annual rent of the tenement, being treated as the basis of calculation.

XVI. The order or certificate of the Commissioners, or statement of the Attorney-General, as to the amount of the annual income, shall be conclusive on the Court.

XVII. The enactments, Secretary of State's orders, practice, and forms in force and used in the county courts shall, subject to the foregoing Orders, be adopted with reference to proceedings in matters of charitable trusts, so far as the same are applicable, mutatis mutandis.

XVIII. The above Orders shall be in force until further orders shall be made, under the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, for regulating proceedings in the county courts relating to charitable trusts.

Dated this 8th day of December, 1853.

PRACTICE

WITH RESPECT TO WHAT ALTERATIONS MAY ADVANTAGEOUSLY BE MADE IN THE STATUTES AND RULES RELATING TO THE COUNTY COURTS.

Local Jurisdiction.

1. Has any inconvenience arisen from the local courts record, like that of York, Southwark, &c., having concurrent jurisdiction with the county court?
2. Would it be convenient that such courts should be abolished?

Judge.

3. Has any inconvenience arisen from the qualification of a deputy judge, in point of standing at the Bar, being less than that of a judge?
4. Has any inconvenience arisen from the judge not being empowered to entertain pressing ex-parte applications, though he be not sitting in court at the time, and though he be out of the jurisdiction? (See sect. 105 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95).
5. Has any inconvenience arisen from the judge not being empowered to change the venue to an adjoining district, on special grounds—as, for instance, in cases where he is personally interested, or where, a jury being demanded, he has reason to apprehend that a fair trial cannot be had?
6. Would it be convenient, that, in the event of the judge being prevented from holding the court, the chief clerk, deputy or assistant clerk should have power to adjourn the court and the proceedings at his discretion?
7. Would it be convenient that the judge, clerk, or other officer of a county court should be entitled to sue, and be liable to be sued, in any adjoining district?
8. Would it be convenient that the judge should be empowered to suspend or discharge any subordinate clerk of his court who has been guilty of a neglect of duty or other misconduct?
9. Has any inconvenience arisen from the early or late hours at which or to which the court has sat?
10. What, in your opinion, is the earliest or latest hour at which and to which a court should sit?

Officers.

11. Has any inconvenience arisen from the circumstance that the subordinate officers of the courts are not bound to find security for the due performance of their duties? (See sect. 36 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95).

Clerk.

12. Would it be convenient that there should be a resident chief clerk at every court?
13. Would it be convenient in the smaller courts that the offices of chief clerk and high bailiff should be united? (See sect. 28 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95).
14. What is the most usual day for entering plaints at your court?
15. Does any and what inconvenience arise from the chief clerk, deputy clerk, assistant clerk, or high bailiff not being empowered to take affidavits with reference to the business of the court? (See stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 23).

16. Would it be convenient that all orders of court should be delivered to the bailiff for service before the closing of the clerk's office on the following day?

Bailiff.

17. Would it be convenient that the bailiff of a home court should be permitted to serve process in any neighbouring district without the special order of the judge? (See rules 54 and 55, and stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 61).

18. Does any and what inconvenience arise from the oath of the bailiff being necessary in every case to the service of process?

19. Would it be convenient that the oath should be dispensed with, treating the bailiff's indorsement as prima facie proof of the matters there stated, and a false indorsement being made punishable as a misdemeanour?

Summons.

20. Would it be convenient to enable the plaintiff to sue in the district in which the defendant has had employment within six months before suit?

21. Would it be convenient to enable a plaintiff to sue a defendant in the district in which any material part of the cause of action arose?

22. Would it be convenient to enable a plaintiff to sue in the district in which a defendant at the time of suit has employment?

23. Would it be convenient to enable the plaintiff to sue in all cases without leave of the court? (See sect. 60 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95).

24. Has any inconvenience arisen from the present practice with respect to minors suing and being sued?

25. Has any inconvenience arisen from the practice with respect to successive summonses, under rule 41?

26. Would it be convenient that a summons should be in force for six months, the clerk altering the return day in the event of non-service?

27. Would it be convenient, that, in the event of non-service of a summons, notice by prepaid letter should be sent to the plaintiff, stating to what day the return is altered?

28. Would it be convenient that in claims above 10*l.* the practice of judgments by default should be introduced, if the defendant has been personally served, leaving it optional to the plaintiff to proceed in the ordinary way without personal service?

Special Defences.

29. Has any inconvenience resulted from the practice with respect to special defences required by sect. 76 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95?

30. Would it be convenient that those notices should not be required?

Advocates.

31. Would it be convenient that the managing clerk of an attorney should be allowed to appear for a party?

Witnesses.

32. Would it be convenient that the county court should be empowered to grant a habeas corpus ad testificandum?

33. Have you found the liability to be fined insufficient to compel the attendance of witnesses; and if so, what other power should be given the court?

Evidence.

34. Would it be convenient to introduce into the practice of the county courts the rules established by sects. 117—119 of stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, with respect to the admission of documents, the proof of such admission, and notices to produce?

Jury.

35. Has any inconvenience arisen from jurors being selected by the clerk? If yes, who should select them?

Judgments.

36. Would it be convenient that judgments in the county courts for sums of 10*l.* and upwards should bear interest?

Execution.

37. Would it be convenient to enable the judge, on the hearing of both parties, to alter any judgment as to the amount of instalment and time of payment, without a previous judgment summons?

38. Would it be convenient that execution against goods in a foreign district should be levied without the seal of the foreign court, and that the process should be issued directly to the bailiff of the foreign court?

39. Would it be convenient that the bailiff should have power to seize land as well as chattels? (See sect. 96 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95).

40. Would it be convenient that warrants of execution and warrants of commitment should be in force, at the discretion of the plaintiff, for one year, instead of three months, from their date? (See Common-law Procedure Act, sect. 124, and rules 119 and 131).

41. Would it be convenient to discontinue the practice of appraisal on executions from the county court?

Commitment.

42. Would it be convenient that a judgment summons should issue in the district in which the original judgment was obtained, as well as in that in which the defendant dwells?

43. Would it be convenient that the judge should be empowered to grant alternative orders on judgment summonses, directing either payment within a specified time, or imprisonment?

44. Would it be convenient that plaintiffs should be at liberty to issue judgment summonses in the county court on judgments obtained in the superior courts for less than 20*l.*, without first taking out plaints on such judgments?

45. Would it be convenient that the non-execution of a warrant of execution, and the non-execution of a warrant of commitment, and the non-service of a judgment summons of commitment, should be communicated by prepaid post letter to the party issuing the process?

47. Does any inconvenience arise from the practice of not taking a committed defendant to the nearest gaol?

48. Would it be convenient that the cost of conveying a prisoner to gaol should be borne by the court; and if not, have you any proposal for reducing the expense to parties?

49. Are the rules 111 and 112, which deprive the plaintiff of the cost of unexecuted warrants unless the judge shall otherwise direct, inconvenient?

Possession of Tenements.

50. Would it be convenient that warrants for giving possession of tenements should be in force, at the discretion of the plaintiff, for a longer period than the present practice permits? If yes, what period would you suggest? (See stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 122, and rule 200).

Fines.

51. Would it be convenient that the county court should have power to enforce the payment of all penalties, fines, and forfeitures imposed by the court, in the same manner as any judgment for debt or damages? (See sects. 130-133 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95).

Appeal.

52. Would it be convenient that the judge of a county court, against whose decision notice of appeal is given, should be required in all cases to settle the statement of facts on which the appeal proceeds? (See sect. 15 of stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61).

53. Would it be convenient that an appeal should be allowed in any other cases than those provided for by stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 14?

54. Are you of opinion that in cases where an appeal is allowed, it should be confined to matters of law?

Certiorari.

55. Is the present system of removal by certiorari convenient in practice?

Suitors' Money.

56. Would it be convenient to limit the period within which suitors' money may be claimed by them to less than six years? (See sect. 112 of stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95).

General Question.

57. Can you suggest any amendment, addition, or improvement in the statutes, rules, or forms?

QUESTIONS RELATING TO THE FEES LEVIED IN THE COUNTY COURTS.

Assuming that the amount to be levied by fees can be considerably reduced, what is your opinion on the following points?

As to the mode of levying the fees:—

58. In your judgment can the number of separate fees be advantageously diminished?

59. In your judgment can the fees be advantageously levied by stamps?

60. Would it be expedient to adopt some such system of stamps as the following?

Seven classes of stamps:

1. On copy summons.
2. On judgment by consent.
3. On hearing order.
4. On execution warrant.
5. On judgment summons.
6. On hearing order of judgment summons.
7. On commitment warrant.

Each class to be subdivided into five heads:

1. A stamp for plaints for 2*l.* and under.
2. " " between 2*l.* and 5*l.*
3. " " between 5*l.* and 10*l.*
4. " " between 10*l.* and 20*l.*
5. " " above 20*l.*

61. Is it advisable to keep up the distinction between judge's fees, clerk's fees, bailiff's fees, and the general fund?

62. Is it desirable that the paying in fees and the paying out fees should be abolished?

63. Is it desirable that the fee of 1*s.* 6*d.*, which is levied on entering a special defence, should be abolished?

64. Is it desirable that cases settled before the clerk, by consent, should be subject to the same fees as if they were heard by the judge?

65. Is it desirable that the rule which authorises the highbailiff to charge "a shilling a mile for carrying every delinquent to prison" should be abolished or modified?

66. Is it desirable that the bailiff's mileage fee should be reduced or abolished?

67. Is it desirable that the rule which, on applications to recover possession of tenements, imposes a fee calculated on the yearly value or rent of the premises sought to be recovered, should be modified?

68. In cases of extraordinary jurisdiction given to the court by the consent of parties, under sect. 17 of stat. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, is it desirable that the fees should be reduced?

69. Is it desirable that any fee should be charged for subpoenas?

70. Is it desirable that the fee for swearing affidavits, with respect to the business of the county courts, should be abolished?

71. Is it desirable that the fee for adjournment should be abolished?

72. Is it desirable that the fee for applying for a new trial, or to set aside proceedings, should be abolished?

73. Is it desirable that the fee for proceedings in the nature of a scire facias should be abolished? (See rule 172).

74. Is it desirable that the fee for applying for a summons out of the district should be abolished?

75. Is it desirable to preserve the present proportion between the fee imposed on the summons and that levied for the hearing?

76. Is it desirable to preserve the present distinction between the fee for hearing with a jury, and the fee for hearing without a jury?

77. In your judgment is 5s. a sufficient remuneration for the jury?

78. Is it desirable to make any alteration in the fee charged for taking recognisances, bonds, or security for costs, or in that charged for inquiring into sufficiency of sureties?

79. Is it desirable that the fee for giving notice of payment into court should be abolished, the service of the notice being retained? (See rule 117).

80. Are there any fees that you consider either peculiarly oppressive to the suitor, or peculiarly inconvenient to levy? If so, state them, and distinguish those which especially press on the poorer class of suitors.

As to the mode of remunerating the officers of the court:—

81. Is it desirable that the clerks of the courts should be paid either wholly or partially by salaries, instead of fees?

82. Is it desirable that the bailiffs of the courts should be paid either wholly or partially by salaries, instead of fees?

83. If the last two questions, or either of them, be answered in the affirmative, do you think that any additional provisions, and what, would be required in order to secure a due performance of their duties by those officers?

As to the mode in which the business is transacted in the clerk's office:—

84. Has any inconvenience resulted from the present mode of bookkeeping used in the county courts?

85. Would it be convenient to diminish the number of books kept by the clerks?

86. Would it be convenient that the plaint book, the minute book, the fee book, and the execution and commitment book, should be embodied in one book, to be subdivided into two parts, containing—

1. Original plaints;

2. Judgment summonses; and to be called the record?

87. Have you reason to believe that letters required by the practice to be sent by post are not duly delivered at the post-office by the subordinate officers of the court?

88. Has any inconvenience resulted from the present mode of service by post of orders for payment? (See rule 114).

89. Is it desirable that a letter-box should be attached to each county court, and that the postman should be required to call for the letters, and to give receipts for the number delivered; or can you suggest any other means to detect inaccuracies in the delivery of the letters at the post-office?

90. Is it desirable that the post-office should be made more extensively available than it now is for the service of notices, summonses, and other proceedings in the county courts? If yes, to what extent?

91. Are the letters passing through the post-office in your district delivered by the postman, or called for at the office by the parties to whom they are addressed?

LONDON, JANUARY 7, 1854.

It seems that at length a specific plan is to be brought forward for concentrating the Courts of Law and Equity in one locality. The facetious description of their scatteredness and its effects, in which a writer in The Times indulged on the 4th instant, is perhaps a little—but it is really not much—exaggerated. Indeed, the practical inconvenience to the Profession and to the suitor, of having, as happens continually, the Criminal Courts sitting in the city; the Equity Courts at Lincoln's Inn; and the House of Lords, the Privy Council, and the Law Courts at Westminster, cannot be exaggerated. The symbol of infinite magnitude is the only true representative of its quantity of inconvenience. The arrangements, too, at Westminster, even when the Courts of Law and Equity are both sitting at Westminster, are indeed such as almost to deserve the sarcasms of the writer referred to. Those of the Equity Courts are so bad, that it really takes a large portion of the day of any counsel fully engaged, to travel from court to court; and the fatigue of eternally running up and down from the Chancellor's to the Rolls, from the Rolls to the Lords Justices', from that up three flights of stairs to Vice-Chancellor Wood's or Vice-Chancellor Stuart's, and then down again one flight to Vice-Chancellor Kindersley's, and so on à capō, is so extensive, that we have heard some men say, that during term they neither require nor can bear any further exercise. Now, we do not deny that some exercise is necessary, but then it should be taken at the right time. It is inconvenient to be running about when one ought to be speaking in court, and sitting down overcome with fatigue at a period when one might be taking air and exercise. In favour of the concentration of the courts there is every argument; against it none. It will, however, give a colour to the continuance of a very inconvenient practice within the Bar, if that practice is not, as we trust it will be, previously abolished; we mean the practice of the Queen's Counsel, at the equity Bar at least, not confining themselves to any one or even two courts, but practising in every court. This, with a very few exceptions, is the universal practice of the leading counsel in the equity courts. The result of it is most injurious to the suitor, and will, we are confident, ultimately be most injurious to the Bar also. For independently of the actual inconvenience suffered by the suitors by the frequent absence of their leading counsel from the conduct of their causes—an inconvenience which, when it has been sufficiently long and extensively felt to be what, in American phraseology, would be termed realised by the suitors as a body, will suggest to them ideas of the superfluity of leading counsel, when they see the forensic fight so frequently fought out without them;—independently, we say, of this, the mere fact of leading counsel too eagerly running from court to court has a hasty, a hungry look about it, very antagonistic to the development of those feelings of somewhat distant respect with which it is well, both for the public service and for the Bar itself, that leading counsel should be viewed by the suitors and their representatives. Such was the feeling with which the great leaders of the last age were looked at; such was the feeling with which the great leaders of even twenty years back were looked at. Such is not the feeling which follows the erratic footsteps of the leading Bar of this day, and the falling off is more to be attributed to their very modern practice of being too catholic in their court worship, than to any other cause. Another practical evil resulting from the habit is this—that men, who thus practise in all the courts, not only have so much more thrown upon them than they could possibly master if they wasted no time, but do actually waste so much time, partly on bonâ fide locomotion, partly from the distraction of their thoughts and spirits, that they cannot, and notoriously do not, master their cases as cases should be mastered. The consequence is, a generally hasty and slovenly mode of doing business in court; a frequently running fire of nearly useless consultative conversation between the leader and the junior, going on in court while the leader is actually speaking; and a total dislocation of the proper relation between leader and junior, most hostile to the accurate and effective transaction of business. As ourselves members of the outer Bar, we know that we speak the feelings of our corps when we say that the inconvenience and uncertainty that we feel, as a body, from never knowing whether, on a case coming on, we shall be led, as we ought to be, or be not led at all, or be led nominally only, is utterly destructive of comfort in doing our court business, and exceedingly inimical to our doing our department of it well. We do trust that long before the concentration of the courts some arrangement may be made, by which all leading counsel in equity will confine themselves to one original court and the courts of appeal.

COMMISSIONERS TO ADMINISTER OATHS IN CHANCERY.

The Lord Chancellor, under the powers of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 78, intituled "An Act relating to the Appointment of Persons to administer Oaths in Chancery, and to Affidavits made for Purposes connected with Registration," has appointed the following gentlemen to be Commissioners for administering Oaths in Chancery:—

George Nelson Emmet, 14, Bloomsbury-square, to be a London Commissioner.
 Henry Nethersole, 3, New-inn, Strand, to be a London Commissioner.
 John Elliott Fox, 40, Finsbury-circus, to be a London Commissioner.
 Joseph Wheelock, 10, Chancery-lane, to be a London Commissioner.

THE STATUTE-LAW COMMISSION.

WE continue our extracts from Mr. Coode's papers:—

"(123). If these recommendations be justified by any prospective utility, they are quite as applicable to every measure, to every amendment, proposed before consolidation, as to any amendment subsequent to consolidation.

"Indeed this process would of itself be a sure and gradual process of consolidation, more certain of attaining the ultimate result of one consistent body of law than any more extensive consolidation professedly and formally prepared as such.

"At all events, the re-enactment of many isolated portions of the old law, with their amendments interpolated, would certainly prepare the way for the combination of many such fragments under more comprehensive heads. They would inevitably coalesce, when brought to sufficient consistency and conformity, into more extensive consolidations, and with this great advantage, that the partial consolidations would each have undergone the test of practical experience, and perhaps of successive amendments, before it came to be incorporated into the body of a more extensive consolidation.

"(124). Assuming now, that either by this gradual development of uniformity and consistency, or by a distinct and professed process, a consolidation of a body of law were once effected, the further consideration arises, how, in this more extended shape, the law may be amended with the utmost facility, without being dissolidated.

"Reasons have already been given for the subdivision of the matter of a consolidated act into the minutest possible articles, (110). Such minute subdivision is indispensable to the utmost mobility and facility of change in its elements.

"A consolidated law, consisting of numerous articles, frequently as it might require amendment, would rarely, where the law itself were worth retaining, require amendment throughout the whole or any very large portion of the series of its articles.

"It would be inconvenient, in a case where one or a few articles were to be amended, to reprint the whole of the consolidated act, which, being easily accessible in one chapter, could be easily referred to for comparison with any proposed amendment.

"(125). Every amendment of a consolidated act must consist of one or more of three distinguishable things:—first, of the abrogation of one or more of its articles; secondly, of the amendment of one or more of its articles; or, thirdly, of new matter to be interpolated before, between, or after its articles.

"The amendment, when effected, would be, in the first case, the simple re-enactment of the consolidated law, with the abrogated articles omitted; in the second case, with the amended articles in their old place as amended; and in the third case, with the new articles inserted in their proper places and order.

"To effect this, it is suggested that the following would be a safe and convenient course to adopt in passing the amendments; namely—

"That the amending bill should, after the fashion of notices of amendments on bills in Parliament, the practice of which is well known, and probably not susceptible of much improvement for these purposes, run thus:—

'A bill to amend 'the act for relief of the poor,' &c.,

'by omitting articles 9, 10, 21, 56;

'and by substituting for article 4 the following two articles; namely, &c.

'and by inserting after article 7 the following two articles; namely, &c.

'and by inserting after article 96 the following three articles; namely, &c.

'and to re-enact the said act as hereby amended.'

"A bill in such form and terms could be discussed and disposed of with as much ease as a notice of amendment upon a bill, now framed in a similar manner, is discussed and disposed of.

"(126). A bill being passed in this form, the next stage is to give effect to it by incorporating its provisions into the consolidated act. This, it is proposed, should take place with regard to all consolidated acts under the provisions of a general act of Parliament passed for the purpose, and to this effect—'That whenever an act is passed to amend a consolidated act, either by the omission of articles therein, or by the amendment of articles therein, or by the insertion therein of additional articles, such amendments shall take effect accordingly.

'and that the said consolidated act shall thereupon be engrossed, inrolled, and published and printed, with such articles omitted, amended, or added, as the case may be,

'and that the numbering of all chapters, sections, or articles therein shall proceed continuously in the act so amended from number one to the last number, as the case may require.'

"But until some successful experiments have been made, shewing the use of this more general provision, it might be more desirable to provide for the operation of re-enactment and promulgation by a clause in each several act.

"(127). The effect will be, that from the time of consolidation no more repeals will appear upon the statute book, repeals being effected by simple omission of articles; no more amending acts accumulated, such amendments being incorporated in the one subsisting consolidated act; recitals and references would cease, and the law receive all amendment, expansion, and development, without a loss of its unity and cohesion.

"(128). If this course of proceeding were thought worthy of a trial, which might be made with some of the first amendments required upon some of the least important subjects, where failure would be of the less consequence, and remedy the more easy, there would still remain a few details to be arranged to give full and safe effect to the plan. One such detail would be a clause in the general act before mentioned, or a standing form of clause in each amending act, to continue the operation of the consolidated act, as before amendment, to all matters requiring it. But it would probably be a waste of time at present to develop further the details of a plan which may possibly not be thought worth the experiment."

 reporting ought to be made an official business, 98
 this would remedy most of the present evils, ib.
 change too great to be looked for at present, ib.
 to carry it into effect the Bar must take it up as a body, ib.

 prospects of Chancery Bar not encouraging, ib.
 probability of giving county courts equity jurisdiction, ib.
 effects which must follow this, 274 whole system is in a transition state, ib.
 tendency of the public mind is to transfer business to local courts, ib.
 reasons of this, ib.
 Profession should calculate on its probability, ib.
